GREATEST THRONGS OF TOURISTS ARRIVE

Four Liners Come In Between 8 and 10 P. M., Bringing 3,359 Returning Travelers.

HUGE STACKS OF BAGGAGE

Fifth Vessel Puts the Record for a Day's Total to Its Highest—7,720 in the Steerage.

The greatest number of cabin passengers ever to land here in one day from transatlantic liners came in last night between 8 and 10 o'clock. The throng of travelers, numbering 3,529, arrived on four ships, and at midnight the Customs Surveyors and Inspectors were still busy on the piers trying to finish the examination of the mountains of baggage the passengers brought with them. It was roughly estimated that there were nearly 30,000 pieces of baggage.

The liners that figured in the record-breaking landing were the White Star liner Adriatic, from Liverpool; the Holland-America liner Rotterdam, from Rotterdam; the Caledonia of the Anchor Line, from Glasgow, and the Red Star liner Lapland, from Antwerp and Dover.

The Caledonia was the first to reach Quarantine, anchoring off the station there at 4:48 P. M. At 5:24 the big Rotterdam, with more than 1,00 cabin passengers, came up, followed in a little more than an hour by the Adriatic and Lapland.

Gen. Henry, Surveyor of the Port, commenting on the new night record for the customs service, also noted the fact that a new record for twenty-four hours had been made so far as the number of passengers landing from vessels in the oversea trade was concerned. The Cleveland of the Hamburg-American Line, which came up in the morning, furnished the aditional number of cabin travelers to make the new twenty-four hour record. Her cabin list numbered 920, which added to the cabin totals of the quartet that came in last night, made the grand total 4,279.

These figures don't include the third-class passengers of any of the five vessels, who numbered on the five 7,720 persons. The third-class record was not endangered, for on many days in the past a great many more have landed than came in yesterday and last night.

The Day's Record.

Here is the number of cabin passengers on each of the liners, the vesels being named in the order of their arrival:

Cleveland	920
Caledonia	574
Rotterdam	1,080
Lapland	773
Adriatic	932
Total	4,279

Every liner brought its quota of persons of note. On the Rotterdam, among others, was ex-Mayor George B. McClellan and Mrs. McClellan, who have been in Italy. In the steerage were several American college men who worked their way over on a cattle ship, had a good time in England and on the Continent, and managed to save enough money to come home third class.

On the Adriatic was Otto T. Bannard, the Republican candidate for Mayor against Gaynor. He said he had climbed mountains, but was particular to add that they were "little bits of ones." Judge Warren W. Foster of the Court of General Sessions, the British tennis players who are to play in the international contests at Newport and New York, and Col. George Harvey were other passengers.

On the Lapland, which beat the Adriatic to her pier by half an hour, were Supreme Court Justice Francis M. Scott, H. H. Benedict, and J. V. Morris, one of the Vice Presidents of the Erie Railroad.

The 1,943 passengers on the Adriatic (this includes the steerage) had a lot to talk about after they left Quarantine, for the moment that ship was passed by the doctors six detectives from Police Headquarters, four Pinkertons, and one Deputy United States Marshal went on board and began a search that turned out to be as thorough as was ever made of a transatlantic liner. Scotland Yard was the inspiration of the search, which was made in the hope that somewhere in the ship might be found five men who are wanted for stealing diamonds worth $25,000.

The detectives started in the cabins, and late last night were still at work in the steerage, but admitted that they had about given up hope of finding the men they wanted on the Adriatic. Pictures of the five thieves had been sent to New York, and these were shown to the ship's officers, the stewards, and some of the passengers, but none remembered having seen on board during the voyage anybody who looked like any of the photographs. The police refused to give the details of the roberry or the name of the person from whom the diamonds were stolen.

Ex-Mayor McClellan Arrives.

Ex-Mayor McClellan was the most talkative of all the passengers who arrived so far as the reporters were concerned. He and Mrs. McClellan had been in Europe since March. He wore a wide strip of court plaster across his forehead, concealing a cut received by falling down the stairs in a Paris hotel. The McClellans spent much of the early part of their stay in Europe in Italy. From there they went to Hamburg, where Mr. McClellan met his mother, and then returned to Paris.

Mr. McClellan witnessed part of the Camorra trial, occupying a seat on the bench. He was much impressed by what he saw, and especially by the prisoners. He thought them a remarkable group.

"Take, for example, Pericone," he said. "He was born in the gutter and reared himself by his own efforts and educated himself. He is now practically conducting the defense. I cannot see why we are not able to do something with our Italian criminals. The jury must be brave men. Three members are landed proprietors, two are editors, and two are college professors. There are 300 witnesses to be examined, and only about fifty had been examined when I left Paris. One might be able to go over next year in time for the verdict."

Mr. McClellan said he was impressed with the prosperity abroad. France, he said, was prospering, but the greatest progress had been made in Germany. There, he said, prices ruled high and the people had the money to pay. The Moroccan situation, he said, loomed serious when he was in Paris, but he thought the tension was lessening, and the belief was that the question would be settled.

The college men who came over in the Rotterdam's steerage numbered eighteen—six from Dartmouth College and two from the University of Wisconsin. They left in the Leyland liner Columbia on July 6 as cattlemen. There were twenty-one college men, they said, who went to Europe in this way at the same time. They were all enthusiastic over what they had seen.

The Dartmouth men were S. G. Eaton,

DYNAMITE RAILROAD VIADUCT

Dynamiters blew up a section of the viaduct of the New York, Westchester & Boston Railway Company just east of Columbus Avenue, Mount Vernon, last night. It is believed that a deliberate attempt was made to destroy one of the main sections of the new four-track electric rapid transit system which the new corporation is constructing.

According to information received by Chief of Police Foley it is believed that a woman who was seen carrying a satchel in the vicinity of the viaduct did the work, as the representative of others. She was observed walking toward the second pier from Columbus Avenue, which sustained one of the steel girders of the viaduct 150 feet above Columbus Avenue and which was blown to bits. She ran in the direction of the New Haven Railroad tracks, which almost parallel the tracks of the new railroad, after the explosion.

Among those first to investigate the explosion were Mayor Edwin W. Fiske and Assemblyman William S. Coffey. They believe that the destruction was due to a labor disagreement. The Mayor learned that the new Third Street station was being constructed by union labor, while the trestle, a thousand feet distant, was being completed by non-union men.

CATCH 200 CONEY ROWDIES.

Police Have the Worst Night Yet at the Island—Others Arrested Here.

There were at least 300,000 people at Coney Island last night, and the forty men of the strong-arm squad who have been detailed by Police Commissioner Waldo to break up rowdyism on the cars had the busiest session of the season. Most of the trouble was experienced at the Culver Line station, and by midnight no less than 150 men had been arrested there and taken to the Coney Island Station House. Early this morning the police were still having a busy time of it, and were bringing in prisoners by twos and threes. Arrests for disorderly conduct and minor charges brought the number of prisoners up to more than 200, a record for the season.

It was evident as early as 6 o'clock in the evening that the police would have their hands full, and the order went out not to be lenient, and that an especially determined fight was to be waged on the car rowdies.

The prisoners will be arraigned this morning before Magistrate Dooley, who is sitting for Magistrate Hylan this week in the Coney Island Court. Magistrate Hylan sent sixty men arraigned before him last Monday, accused of rowdyism, to the workhouse without the alternative of paying a fine. Those to be arraigned to-day, however, hope to escape with a less severe punishment, as Magistrate Dooley let off with fines of $1 each thirty-seven men who were arrested Saturday night.

Sixteen car rowdies were arraigned before Magistrate Krotel in the Yorkville Court last night charged with creating a disturbance in street cars and on ferryboats. Ten were sentenced to five days each in the Workhouse, four were fined $10 each, and two were discharged. The two discharged were arrested on a ferryboat from Astoria. They were charged with jostling and insulting persons. Magistrate Krotel criticised the detectives who arrested them for disagreeing in their reports of the occurrence.

LOVE LOSES DIVORCE SUIT.

But Oregon Judge Criticises Wife's Countercharges.

Special to The New York Times.

BAKER, Ore., Sept. 3.—Judge William Smith yesterday denied a divorce to Sidney C. Love in the suit against his wife, Marjorie Burnes Love, once called by Burne-Jones, the English artist, the most beautiful woman in America.

Judge Smith, all the way through, finds in favor of the plaintiff, but evidently, his reason for not granting the decree is shown in Paragraph 16, wherein he states that since Mr. Love left England, on Sept. 27, 1909, he has not sought reconciliation with his wife, has not provided a home for her, and has not created a condition such as his wife would accept, without thinking that she would hazard her own happiness by so doing.

The Judge points out that the pride of the plaintiff was broken after the loss of his fortune, and that he was entitled to more consideration from the members of his family than the evidence shows he received.

Judge Smith takes a fling at Mrs. Love's claim that her husband was a gambler, when, by her own testimony, it was shown that she had purchased a gambling outfit for him, paying $1,000 for it.

"Perhaps," says the Judge, "it is possible she would rather have seen her husband behind the wheel entertaining his friends, than to stand in front when it was operated by another."

He also treats lightly her claim that she tried to divert her husband's mind from drink in the pastime of gambling.

"If they really loved each other," says the court, "no quarrel over such a trivial matter as their baby's food could have separated them."

He scornfully denounced the methods of Mrs. Love's attorneys in seeking to prove counter-charges against the plaintiff. The testimony of a negro barber in New York, Sutton, the detective and that of others was thrown out entirely.

Mrs. Sidney Love obtained a divorce in Westchester County before Mr. Love brought his suit in Oregon.

A SUICIDE AFTER HONEYMOON

G. B. Atlee, Young Philadelphia Broker, Shoots Himself.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 3.—George B. Atlee, 31 years old, senior member of the brokerage firm of George B. Atlee & Co., with offices at 119 South Fourth Street, and a former prominent University of Pennsylvania athlete, committed suicide to-day in his home on Llandrello Road, Cynwyd, by shooting himself. He was dead when his bride of three months reached his side. The bullet had plowed through his head, entering at the left temple.

Mr. and Mrs. Atlee had just returned from a honeymoon trip to Canada. He had been suffering from a nervous affection and was on the verge of prostration. This is thought to have prompted the deed.

Mrs. Atlee was waiting for her husband to come down to his breakfast, when she was startled by the sound of a shot coming from the bathroom. With a maid she rushed upstairs, and there found her husband stretched lifeless on the floor, with blood coming from wounds on both sides of his head. Mrs. Atlee fainted by the prostrate form of her husband.

He was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1902. During his college days he was one of the players on the lacrosse and tennis teams. After leaving college he entered the brokerage business and was successful.

Three months ago he was married to Miss Marie Levick. The trip to Canada was made in the hope of regaining his health. They returned three days ago without having accomplished the purpose. He was a member of the Merion and West Chester Country Clubs. He leaves a widow, mother, and two sisters.

MOB STONES REYES IN CITY OF MEXICO

CHARGED BY THE POLICE

Many Hurt, but Mounted Officers Are Not Allowed to Fire—Troops Parade Harmlessly.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 3.—Stoned and forcibly robbed of 3,000 pesos (about $1,500) to-day by a mob of Maderists in the principal thoroughfare of the capital, Gen. Bernardo Reyes, candidate for the Presidency in opposition to Francisco I. Madero, was forced to abandon an effort to address his constituents and to run the gantlet of a jeering crowd upon whom the police had received orders not to fire except as a last resort.

The police repeatedly charged the mob, however, and the records of the Red Cross, the White Cross, and the commissaries account for forty-three wounded as a result of the day's disorders. Most of these were injured by stones, but many show bruises and gashes made by the sabres of the mounted police.

The stoning of Gen. Reyes was the climax of a riot that began about 10 o'clock this morning and had not been entirely quelled at a late hour to-night. Since its beginning police and soldiers have patrolled the streets, but because of the Government's desire not to use violent measures the heavily armed horsemen have not had the desired quieting effect upon the rabble.

Placing their faith in the word of the Government that equal guarantees would be given all parties in the campaign, and trusting Señor Madero's word that he would welcome honest opposition, the backers of Reyes last week called an open-air meeting for to-day. It was announced that Gen. Reyes would make his initial speech of the campaign, the site selected being in front of the $10,000,000 National Theatre in course of construction.

The Trouble Begins.

Early this morning groups of Maderistas began forming in various parts of the city and threats to interfere with the Reyes meeting were heard.

Just before 10 o'clock the partisans of Reyes began gathering in the Avenida Juarez, and the two elements clashed near the western end of the Alameda. Upon this turbulent scene Gen. Reyes, his son Rodolfo, and a group of party leaders drove in an automobile. Far outnumbering the Reyes supporters, the Maderists crowded about the machine, making further progress difficult. The General, stepping from the car, rebuked the mob for its conduct, but his words provoked loud jeers, supplemented by a rain of stones and other missiles.

The automobile was then abandoned. Its occupants walked the length of the Alameda to the centre of the disturbance, a distance of four blocks, the rowdies following and throwing stones.

Mounted police who had been trailing the crowds now rode their horses into the centre of the mob, which gave way before them. Entering a building facing the theatre, Reyes and his escorts went to the second story, from where Reyes stepped onto a balcony with the intention of addressing the crowd, now growing to great proportions.

Such was the disorder, however, that Reyes's escort attempted to dissuade him from making the effort. The old man would not be deterred, and raised his hand for silence. Instead, the tumult grew, and chunks of marble and stones gathered from the ground about the new theatre were hurled at the white-haired figure. A number reached their mark, yet Reyes stood despite the efforts of his son to induce him to seek shelter. For twenty minutes he remained there dodging missiles, which wrecked the windows and signs covering the front of the building.

The police, hated by the populace as the instrument used by Diaz to maintain order with an iron hand, drew their sabres and charged the crowd repeatedly. Content with monetary success each time, however, and remembering their orders to deal gently with the mob, the police reformed after each charge and held their positions on the opposite side of the street. Emboldened by the knowledge that the police did not intend to attempt drastic measures the rabble turned its attention to them, pelting them with a showed of stones.

For more than an hour the fight between the police and the mob continued. For the most part, the police took their medicine stoically, riding into the mass of shouting humanity, trusting to the force of the rush to keep the crowd moving.

Inside the building Reyes's friends had succeeded in convincing him it was useless to try to carry out his programme. Rodolfo Reyes felt for his watch, and it was gone. At least a dozen of the Reyista contingent had been the victims of pickpockets.

By a circuitous route the party went to Police Headquarters, reported their losses and then proceeded to Gen. Reyes's house. There the old General rested during the remainder of the day, denying himself to almost all callers. A few blocks away, in the home of his son, indignant partisans discussed the events and considered the advisability of pursuing the campaign in the face of such odds.

Troops Trouble Mob Little.

Meantime, in the centre of the city, the authorities still had the problem of dealing with the rabble. Orders were sent to the army headquarters, and soon a troop of cavalry appeared, ostensibly to assist the police in restoring order. The army is not hated by the lower classes as is the police. The khaki-clad horsemen were greeted with half-hearted cheers, although, with sabres in hand and cartridge belts filled, they presented no reassuring aspect.

In order to clear the Avenida Juarez and the Avenida San Francisco, into which the rabble had fled, the troops were set marching up and down these thoroughfares. Respectfully the rioters gave way before their advance, closing in immediately behind them, leaving for the police the unpleasant duty of charging and receiving each time a shower of missiles. At one point in the Avenida San Francisco the popular favor of the army was shown by occupants of galleries, who threw upon the passing column quantities of flowers.

Early in the afternoon the main body of rioters was broken into small groups, which paraded through the streets, halting at intervals to listen to a harangue by some member. Mounted police and soldiers could be seen from almost any street intersection in the downtown district, but rarely was any attempt made to disperse the smaller gatherings which joyously continued their work of campaigning until long after dark.

Representatives of the Red Cross and its rival, the White Cross, appeared in the streets at the beginning of the rioting. In automobiles nurses and doctors penetrated the mob, following every charge, and gathered up the injured, giving first aid to many, and bearing to the hospitals all whose injuries were of a serious character.

Francisco I. Madero left town at 2:30 this afternoon for Puebla, the first stop in his itinerary through the south.

RESCUED FROM SHIP IN BREECHES BUOY

Captain's Two Daughters and Part of the Crew of the Carrie A. Lane Saved.

SKIPPER TOO ILL TO MOVE

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Sept. 3.—Life savers stationed at the Shinnecock Light discovered at daylight to-day a four-masted schooner with her nose fast in a sandbar a mile east of the Shinnecock life-saving station. Aboard the schooner were two young women, who could be seen making signals, and a crew of eleven persons.

The young women, who turned out to to be daughters of the Captain, were brought ashore in a breeches buoy, and then the buoy made regular trips between the schooner and the shore until all of the crew except the Captain, who was ill in his cabin with fever and could not be moved, and three men, were landed on the beach.

The young women were reluctant to leave their father, and consented to be taken ashore only after being assured that the members of the crew who remained aboard would take care of him. They were taken by Miss Elizabeth Penny, daughter of the Captain of the life guards, to the life-saving station, where they got warm food and were made comfortable. They will remain as guests of the life savers until the schooner is pulled free and is put in a seaworthy condition so that her interrupted trip to Boston may be resumed.

The stranded schooner is the Carrie A. Lane, freighted with railroad ties from the yellow pines of Mississippi. Capt. C. N. Stratton, in command, was ill at his home, Pascagoula, Miss., when the boat was ready to sail, but insisted that he be allowed to make his usual trip. His two grown daughters, who had been nursing him, went along to attend to him on the voyage.

Through the hurricane off Cape Hatteras and the rough seas following it the schooner made her way without mishap. That she came to grief on the Long Island sandbar was due to the fact that the first mate, who was in actual command, was unfamiliar with the coast line and lost his reckoning.

About 3:40 o'clock this morning, while the steersman thought he was well off shore and was making fair headway under a comfortable breeze, the schooner's nose suddenly began to scrape along the sand. It was high tide and a sea rougher than the average was running. The seas, piling up behind the schooner, drove her forward into the sand and made all efforts to windlass her into deeper water useless.

The crew was turned out, and a hasty examination made below decks showed that no water was coming in, and that the schooner's hull was sound. The crew and the Captain's daughters sat by until daylight, when the life savers descried them.

It was Capt. Penny's intention to go out to the schooner in a lifeboat, but the sea proved too rough, and it was decided instead to fire a line across her bow. A signal to this effect was made to those aboard, who stood by to catch the line.

The first shot was a success. The line fell across the deck forward, and in a short time the breeches buoy was ready for operation. The second mate came ashore first to test the breeches, and the Captain's daughters followed. Five members of the crew then used the breeches, after which it was made fast, so that it could be brought into use in case of danger to the vessel.

Members of the Southampton Life Saving Station went to the assistance of the Shinnecock crew and stood ready throughout the day to launch their lifeboat in case it should become necessary. Several members of both crews favored bringing Capt. Stratton ashore, but he refused to leave the boat, and in his weakened condition it was considered best not to disturb him.

The derelict destroyer Seneca and a wrecking tug, which picked up a description of the stranded schooner's whereabouts by wireless, steamed close to her this afternoon, and to-morrow morning at high tide will make an effort to pull her into deep water.

LOST FROM LINER AT SEA.

Caroline Mercer, Passenger on Minneapolis, Reported Missing.

Word was received yesterday by the International Mercantile Marine Company by a wireless message from Capt. Hasker of the steamship Minneapolis of the Atlantic Transport Line that Miss Caroline Mercer had been lost overboard. The Minneapolis sailed from here on Saturday afternoon, and at the time of the receipt of yesterday's message it was estimated that the liner was 450 miles out.

The message from Capt. Hasker read:

> Missed, Caroline Mercer. If body is washed up, light brown hair, brown eyes, 5 feet 6 inches, 118 pounds. Clothing marked "C. M." Notify W. Farnam Smith, Omaha Club, Omaha, Neb.

The message was sent to Mr. Smith, who is supposed to be a friend of Miss Mercer's family. Nothing is known about the young woman here except that Dr. Nelson Mercer, Mrs. Mercer, Miss Caroline Mercer, and Miss Navy Mercer occupied Suite D-E on the Minneapolis.

GIRL WASHED OFF LINER.

Third Officer of the Pretorian Dives After Her and Also Drowns.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Sept. 3.—Reports of the drowning of Mary Morgan, a fourteen-year-old girl passenger, and Arthur Ballantine, third officer of the vessel, who went to her assistance when she was washed overboard, were brought in by the steamer Pretorian, which arrived here from Liverpool late yesterday.

The Pretorian ran into a heavy storm Wednesday, and during the blow a wave carried the girl overboard, and Ballantine dived after her. Miss Morgan was on her way to this city with her mother to meet her father.

Two other passengers were knocked down by the rolling of the ship in the storm, and were badly hurt.

TWENTY-NINE HURT IN ROCKAWAY WRECK

FILLED WITH EXCURSIONISTS

Men, women, and children bound for a day's outing were alighting from a Long Island Railroad eight-car electric train at Holland Station, Rockaway Beach, about 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning when some of them noticed John Denbroski, flagman at the Bayview Avenue crossing, which marks the limit of the long station platform, running up the tracks toward Hammels Station waving a red flag. Toward him came a train, drawn by a locomotive and moving rapidly. Some of those who saw it and who, because of many visits to Rockaway Beach or Far Rockaway, knew the time tables laughed as they leisurely stepped from the train.

"It's just the train from Long Island City," they said. "It's always close behind us at this point. That flagman's getting excited over nothing."

"But it's not slowing down. It will hit us at this rate," exclaimed others as the shrill scream of the locomotive's whistle reached their ears, and then the crowd suddenly realized the truth.

"It's running away," they shouted, and instantly the passengers began a wild scramble to get off the train.

Down on them came the fast-running steam train. There were many passengers still in the cars, fighting to reach the doors when there was a crash. The nose of the locomotive crashed into the car vestibule of the last car on the halted train. There came the sound of escaping steam, the grinding of metal on metal, and the rending of splintered wood as the roof rose from a wooden car in the middle of the halted train and slid half atop the roof of the next car ahead, which was made of heavy steel. The jolt which tossed men, women, and children into heaps on the floors of the cars, lifted the sixth car of the train off the track and dropped it across the third rail, where blue sparks and sheets of yellow flame instantly arose.

Over all other noise rose the screams of frightened passengers. To those who had reached the platform before the crash and who stood in terrified inaction as the trains were wrecked, it seemed that dozens must have been killed, either in the telescoped wooden car or in that which, lying on the live rail, threatened to become the centre of a huge bonfire. When the last passenger had been taken from the trains, however, it was found that while twenty-nine had been hurt, none had been killed, and the inflictions of the injured consisted mostly of cuts and bruises.

Injured on the Steam Train.

Those on the steam train who were injured are:

BONGEOFFON, ROSE, 59 years, 279 Division Avenue, Brooklyn; left leg cut.

NIXON, LAWRENCE, 9, 853 East Twenty-third Street, Paterson, N. J.; contusions of the head.

NIXON, HELEN, 13, 853 East Twenty-third Street, Paterson, N. J.; lacerations of face and head.

Injured on the Electric Train.

Those on the electric train who were injured are:

PERLEY, WILLIAM, 29, 924 Kelly Street, Brooklyn; left leg crushed.

WEIL, Mrs. MATILDA, 32, 407 East Fifty-first Street, Manhattan; contusions of head and hands.

WEIL, ARTHUR, 8, son of Mrs. Weil; gash on forehead.

By a freak of chance which even railroad men thought strange, most of the injured were found to have been seated in the last two cars of the steam train, furthest from the point of collision, and in what would have appeared to be the safest place in either train. It was in one of these cars that Mrs. Siedner, whose leg was broken, had been sitting. Nineteen of the others who were injured were in these cars also.

It is supposed that the last two cars received the greatest shock of the crash through momentum. As each car halted at the sudden jar, and the car behind plunged into it, some of the strain was absorbed by the couplings. By the time the last cars were halted, however, there was a solid mass of cars ahead in which there was no give and into which the last cars crashed as into a stone wall.

Comparative Safety in Train Hit.

Despite the fact that most of the injured were in the last train the greatest damage was done to the electric train ahead. This was composed of seven steel cars and one wooden car, the latter being fourth in line from the motor car, sandwiched in between cars of steel construction. It was the roof of this which was lifted as the car was partly tele-

COMSTOCK STOPS RAFFLE.

Threatens Churchmen with Arrest for Violating Anti-Gambling Law.

HOBART, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Anthony Comstock of New York, who is spending his vacation at Stamford, a Western Catskill Mountain resort, has thrown the natives and Summer visitors there into a ferment because of his action in stopping the raffle of an automobile to help the finances of a church. Several Summer visitors conceived a plan to raise money for the Church of the Sacred Heart by raffling an automobile, and tickets sold readily at a dollar apiece.

More than 500 tickets had been sold when Mr. Comstock heard of the scheme and told the managers they must call the raffle off. They protested vigorously, but Mr. Comstock was obdurate and intimated that prosecutions under the anti-gambling law would follow an attempt to hold the raffle. Now the managers are busy redeeming the tickets.

ARREST CHURCH TREASURER.

C. H. Vredenburg of Newburg Charged with Larceny of $15.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Charles H. Vredenburg, who has served for several years as Treasurer of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of this city, was arrested last night on the charge of larceny. The complaint was lodged against him by Daniel J. Coutant, one of the teachers of the Sunday School, who for more than thirty years has been City Clerk.

The particular charge on which the arrest was made was that Vredenburg had failed to account for $15. There will be other charges brought later, it is stated.

RAID WOMEN GAMBLERS.

Fashionable Resort in Minneapolis Closed by Victim's Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 3.—An ultra-fashionable gambling house, like those conducted here in frontier days, has been closed by the police after running for several weeks, during which time hundreds of women have squandered their money in the place. A society woman ran it.

The street in front of the house on Nicollet Avenue was constantly lined with limousines and town cars of the rich women of Minneapolis. All sorts of games were played, so the police say. The closing of the house was brought about by the wrath of a well-to-do grocer of the city, who discovered that his wife had lost considerable money there.

The husband said his wife was making inroads on the family funds to such an extent that he was unable to meet his bills. He said he had heard that other women players were doing the like. He declared his wife had lost as much as $70 in a single sitting. He said that when the card games were over the women were invited to buy tickets that entitled them in a chance in raffles of hand-painted china or other goods.

SPIRIT WARNS LYMAN J. GAGE.

Medium Taking Message Is Stricken and May Not Recover.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Sept. 3.—Lyman J. Gage, former Cabinet officer, has been warned that a woman is attempting to blackmail him. The warning was mysteriously cut short, and the Spiritualist medium who was delivering it from the spirit world is now in a coma from which he cannot be aroused.

The medium, L. H. Disler, came here from Los Angeles and started a spirit circle, at which Mr. Gage was a frequent visitor, asking frequent questions and receiving many messages, the one warning Mr. Gage being interrupted at a gathering of Spiritualists last Saturday evening.

Mr. Gage admits the affair in full, but declines to discuss any of its features. When Disler fell into a cataleptic state, the others present did their best to revive him, but finding that futile, they sent him to the Agnew Hospital.

The seance was held at the home of George H. Ballou, son-in-law of Mr. Gage. Disler's son arrived here from Los Angeles to-night and a sister is in constant attendance upon him. Disler is well known in Spiritualist circles. Disler uses a telegraph key to get his messages from the spirit world. He was in the middle of a communication for Mr. Gage when his "spirit guide" tapped him on the head.

J. O. Brandish, a personal friend of Disler, says the patient's condition is critical.

Mr. Gage stated to-night that the occurrence was true, and admitted that he was in the seance circle. Mr. Gage says Disler was stricken suddenly and that it is doubtful if he recovers.

HAD MRS. CHOPAK ARRESTED.

Seabright Hotel Man Took This Course After Dispute with Her Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., Sept. 3.—Mrs. Julius Chopak, wife of a customs lawyer at 11 Broadway, New York, was arrested this afternoon by two Seabright policemen on a charge of skipping her board bill at Pannaci's Hotel, Seabright. The arrest was made at the Shrewsbury Inn, Oceanic, where Mrs. Chopak went after leaving the Seabright house. She was locked up in a room of the station here, but as she objected so strongly to the odors, which made her ill, she was taken into the Chief's private office.

While there she said that when she first went to the hotel several weeks ago she paid $25 weekly for board. This she considered excessive, and asked for a more moderate rate. Pannaci, she says, agreed to reduce the board to $3 a day. The board was paid in checks sent by her husband, the last check being made according to the reduced rate. Differences, it is said, arose between the hotel man and Chopak, who then stopped payment on the check.

Mrs. Chopak said she then concluded to seek another boarding place and moved to Oceanic. She had been in custody here about an hour when Justice of the Peace Edward Wise appeared and accepted a $100 bond for her appearance in court to-morrow morning. At that time it is expected that the demands of the hotel proprietor will be satisfied. Mrs. Chopak's bondsman is George A. Moody, a local harness dealer, who received as collateral an emerald ring which was said to be worth $600. Mrs. Chopak was formerly a comic opera singer, her stage name being Lulu Belmont. She is about 30 and pretty and was richly dressed. She says she was born in Cuba and that her family are well-to-do sugar planters in the West Indies.

Life Guards Rescue a Bather.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 3.—Thousands of spectators on the Board Walk saw two lifeguards make a sensational rescue this afternoon. Frank Spangler of Philadelphia went in bathing and was seized with cramps. Guards Lacy and Delancy went to his aid. Spangler sank twice before his rescuers reached him, and they had a hard job in bringing him to the shore. Physicians succeeded after an hour's work in reviving him.

TWO KILLED IN AIR ON ROLLER COASTER

THREE OTHER RIDERS HURT

The shrill scream of a woman, followed by a chorus of frightened cries and the screech of metal against metal and of splintered wood, brought every one within earshot running yesterday afternoon to the Giant Racer, a scenic ride on the southeast corner of Surf Avenue and West Tenth Street, Coney Island.

High up on the steel structure of tracks and supporting beams the firstcomers saw one of the three-car trains which convey passengers, six in a car, over the swift ride, slowly dragging to a stop along a level stretch of track forty feet above the street. The rear car was tilted outward at an agle of 45 degrees, and from it hung the limp forms of two women. Two other women and a man, the former screaming, were struggling to hold their places in the side of the tilted car.

In the cars ahead terrified men and women glanced back, not certain of what had happened but frightened by the jolting and the uproar. With the rear car bouncing over the ties and dragging back like an anchor, the little train at last halted. It stopped beside a small platform of narrow boards left in the structure by workmen who erected it last Spring, and on to this flimsy isle of safety several employes of the ride quickly helped the frightened passengers.

When they would have helped the two women in the last car they saw that their heads, chests, and arms had been crushed and battered by the pounding against the supports of the structure. The first doctor to reach them said that they had died instantly. They were:

KALLIGNAN, Miss MAY, 148 Meriden Street, Scranton, Penn.

PROVOST, Mrs. ALICE, 227 Harrison Avenue, Jersey City.

The other occupants of this car, all of whom were hurt, were:

HARDIN, Mrs. MARY, 141 Nott Terrace, Schenectady, N. Y.

SMITH, WILLIAM, J., 229 Monitor Street, Brooklyn.

In Surf Avenue, West Tenth Street, and Sheridan's Walk, the thoroughfares which bound the Giant Racer to the east, north, and west—to the south is the beach and ocean—the crowds gathered till they blocked the streets from curb to curb. Sergt. O'Connell of the Coney Island Station had been almost opposite the Giant Racer when the accident happened. He telephoned instantly for the reserves, and Lieut. Conboy sent out every man in the station house. Capt. Thomas Murphy and Inspector Dooley arrived a few minutes later.

The crowds were shoved back and lines were formed as at a fire. Then Truck Company 144 was summoned from West Fifteenth Street. The firemen, under Battalion Chief Rogers, brought their longest ladders, and they quickly ran several of these up to the tracks opposite the narrow platform on which, besides the employes of the company, there stood more than a dozen men and women who had been passengers in the three-car train.

By placing boards across the tracks a way was made to the ladders and to a stairway which ran up beside the inclined plane on which the cars are hauled at the start of the downward trip. Over these trembling passages the firemen and policemen helped those men and women who had been in the cars ahead and who were unhurt. The injured were carried into the office of the company on the street level, while the bodies of the dead women were left on the platform and covered from view of the curious crowd.

The derailed car and the two fastened ahead of it were left where they had halted. Policemen were put on guard and these will not be interfered with until Coroner Rooney has had a chance to examine the scene of the accident today. It is not believed, however, that he will be able to discover the cause of the accident. Policemen and firemen who studied the torn-up tracks and the derailed car yesterday declared that they could not account for it. The management of the road could tell no more than what every one could see, that the car had left the tracks. Why it had done so, they declared they could not tell.

The scene of the accident was on what is known as the second level of the ride. The trains of three cars are hauled to the top of an eighty-foot incline by a traveling chain. This incline runs directly away from Surf Avenue in a southerly direction, so that persons in the street can see the cars starting away for the trips. Two cars are hauled up at the same time, and then they race to the bottom around a series of curves and dips. They travel on separate tracks and there is no danger of a collision. Once having been hoisted to the top of the structure, the cars descend to the bottom by momentum and gravity. There are no motormen on them, and there is no power to move them.

On each level, of which there are three, men are stationed at all times when cars are running to see that they do not approach the vurves at too high speed. Levers which operate brakes are at the hand of each of these men, and it depends on them to graduate the speed of the cars as they approach a turn. There are wheels made fast to the sides of each car in a horizontal position in relation to the ground which press against boards raised on both sides of the tracks. These sideboards can be squeezed slightly toward each other by the brakes at command of the operators on each level, and by reducing the space in which the cars run the speed of the vehicles is reduced, much of the momentum being lost in the effort to crowd between the embracing sideboards.

James Fennel was in charge of these brakes on the second level, and set them in operation as the train to which the accident occurred approached the curve at the Surf Avenue end of the tracks. That he reduced the speed sufficiently is proved, the management pointed out last night, by the fact that the train took the curve in safety, the last car not leaving the track until the entire train had passed the curve and was on the straightaway track leading back to the next dip to the lower level.

When it did leave the track the rear car began to tear up the ties, over which it bumped and jolted, the whole car being twisted partly over on its side. For twenty feet it ran thus before the drag proved sufficient to stop the cars.

It was to the right, or outside, that the car tilted, and it was on this side that

Mrs. Provost and Miss Kallighan were seated. They were not thrown from the car, but it is supposed that they fell outward sufficiently to be struck by the protruding ends of the ties over which the car was jolting. The superstructure at this point is so far from the tracks that it is not thought the women could have been flung against this and remained in the car at the same time.

After treatment by Drs. Graboff, Sonnenschein, and Rubin of the Coney Island Hospital, Smith and the two women who were injured were able to leave the island. Smith was a nephew of Miss Kallighan, and had escorted her to the island. Mrs. Provost was a sister of Mrs. Mary Hardin, and with her and Mrs. Ruby Hardin composed a party separate from Smith and Miss Kallighan. Mrs. Provost and both Mrs. Hardin had been stopping with friends at 145 West Forty-third Street.

After the accident the Giant Racer was closed, with policemen on guard. It is the property of the International Roller Coaster Company, of which Arthur Jarvis is President, Edwin J. Zimmer Secretary and local manager, and Arthur Middleton Treasurer. Zimmer was taken to the Coney Island Police Station, but was not held. The company owns the roller coaster at Brighton Beach, which was damaged in the electrical storm of Aug. 18. Its structure at Coney Island helped to save the island at the time of the fire which destroyed Dreamland, for its steel stanchions resisted the flames and kept them from spreading further westward.

CHURCH PACKED FOR BRYAN.

He Talks on "The Prince of Peace" and "The Old Gospel."

William Jennings Bryan, who is an Elder of his home church in Nebraska, made two addresses yesterday, one of them, "The Prince of Peace," at the Stony Brook (L. I.) Chautauqua, the other, "The Old Gospel," at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, on 104th Street, west of Columbus Avenue. About 3,000 persons heard him at each place.

The Harlem church had been placarded with a sign headed "Happy Sunday Evening," making announcement of Mr. Bryan's appearance, and long before his arrival the church was crowded. About 500 persons gathered in the street, shut out from the church, and set up a cheer when the three-times Presidential candidate arrived.

After an introduction by the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, who has advertised a series of "Happy Sunday Evenings," Mr. Bryan launched forth on his self-appointed task, a defense of the inspiration of the Bible and the divinity of Christ.

Mr. Bryan began by saying that all that he is, including his power of good, he owed to the early inculcation of Christian principles. He said he had been taught a horror of profane language, so that he not only felt no temptation to use it himself, but that the sound of it so irked him that he was forced to leave the company of those who used it.

His early training, Mr. Bryan said, also included a fortification against the use of alcoholic beverages. He said that of all classes of people, the politicians have the strongest temptations toward drink, yet he had never felt the slightest desire for a drink, and his abstinence was so well known that he has received few invitations.

Following Mr. Bryan was a gray-haired and bespectacled correspondent of a Western newspaper. He was at first denied admission to the church, but finally gained entrance by kicking on the front door and demanding admittance in the name of his journal. He took copious notes of Mr. Bryan's theological argument that the Bible is "not a man-made book" and his challenge to all "materialists" to explain the growth of Christianity on some other theory than the divinity of Christ.

MURDERED DRIVER OF AUTO.

Chauffeur's Body Found in Fox River—Money Not Touched.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—Fred Wennerstrom, a Chicago automobile owner and chauffeur, was murdered and his body weighted and thrown into Fox River at Cary, Ill., last Wednesday night. The body was discovered beneath the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad bridge this morning.

Wennerstrom's car is missing. No one at Cary saw the auto in the vicinity on Wednesday night, but two farmers saw tracks of the car Thursday morning. They also discovered blood on the ground.

Taking iron brake shoes from railroad cars on the adjacent Northwestern track for weights, the murderers tied the automobile rain curtain about the body and threw it into the river.

Wennerstrom was shot twice in the back of the head. His clothing was practically undisturbed. A pocketbook in his trousers containing $55 adds to the mystery of the affair.

Wennerstrom left Chicago Wednesday evening. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon he drove his machine out of the Monitor Garage, 3,008 North Clark Street. Nothing more was heard of the driver until 4 o'clock this afternono, when David Joslin, District Attorney of McHenry County, called up the Chicago Detective Bureau and informed it of the murder.

The man's body had been identified by his chauffeur's card. The only theory advanced so far proceeds from a casual remark made by Wennerstrom to Harry Hunt, the owner of the garage.

"I'm going out for a two days' trip with some Post Office Inspectors, who are hunting a gang of safe-blowers," he said. "Maybe I won't be back for three days."

HELD AS POSTAL FORGER.

Money Orders Used to Dupe Jewelry Firms, Inspectors Say.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 3.—Charged with forging money orders to the extent of $1,385, Charles Ferguson, alias John J. McCann, was arrested at Mankato after a long chase by Post Office Inspectors A. E. Germer, W. J. Marles, and P. V. Postle.

Ferguson, it is alleged, stole 150 money order blanks from the Devil's Lake (N. D.) Post Office on Aug. 21, and has since been filling them out in sums of from $25 to $100 and forwarding them as payment on jewelry orders to be filled by mail. When he was arrested all but twenty-two of the blanks were found in his room at the hotel, according to the authorities.

Money orders were sent to Tiffany, New York, for $400; to Loftis Brothers & Co., Chicago, $200; Howard Watch Company, Boston, $100, and in various amounts to other firms.

According to the Inspectors, Ferguson, using St. Paul as a base, operated in the following manner: He had a special money order stamp made, and after writing the name of the Postmaster at Devil's Lake, R. Daley, he stamped the order and forwarded it to one of the jewelry firms, directing them to send the jewelry to St. Paul. He then went to Mankato, and ordered all mail forwarded to him there. All the mail found had the St. Paul postmark.

KILLED IN RACE BATTLE.

Oklahoma Farmer Shot in Fight with Negroes.

DURANT, Okla., Sept. 3.—Horace Gribbles, a white farmer, was killed in a battle between five white men and five negroes near Caddo. The white men declare that they were fired upon, while the negroes say the whites were the aggressors. Feling is high and a race riot is feared.

A stick of dynamite with the fuse partly burned was found near a hut from which the negroes fired. After the encounter the white men fled to Caddo and told of the fight. Officers hastened to the scene of the encounter and found Gribbles's body. The negroes did not know they had killed the man until informed by the authorities.

The clash resulted from race trouble, which has existed for the last month, during which one white woman has been attacked and killed, and three attempts at similar crimes have been made by negroes. The negroes here, fearing retaliation by the whites, are sacrificing their crops and property in order to get away.

LUSITANIA SAILS; OFF IN RECORD TIME

In Port Only 32 Hours 10 Minutes, but Hurries Back Fully Coaled and Provisioned.

RUSH TO SAVE SCHEDULE

Which Was Upset by Dock Strike in England — Hasn't Waited to Unload Some of Her Cargo.

When the Cunard liner Lusitania sailed from here at 6 o'clock last evening she had broken the famous record of her sister ship, the Mauretania, which in the rush last December to land her Christmas mails in England in time was unloaded, loaded and coaled, and steamed away from this port within thirty-eight hours of her arrival. The work of getting the Lusitania into port and away again was accomplished in thirty-two hours and ten minutes.

The reason for all this haste is that the Lusitania has been thrown off her schedule by labor troubles on the other side, and it is necessary for her to catch up with her sailing dates to bring home the host of Americans who have booked their return trip on her.

The official time of the arrival of the Lusitania is 9:51 A. M. Saturday. From the time the gangplanks went out until late yesterday afternoon a host of men were at work around the liner. The Lusitania brought 1,619 passengers, and it took several hours before the baggage of the last of these had been removed to the pier and her steerage passengers transported to Ellis Island. As soon as this was done the 367 stewards fell to work putting things shipshape. They had to clean 900 rooms and scrub several miles of alleyways and many feet of stairs. In the engine room the force began at once to tune up engines and get ready for the run to Liverpool.

As soon as possible the big Lusitania was breasted off from her pier and the coal barges sent alongside. They worked four on each side. The work of coaling began at 1 P. M. Saturday, continued all night, and was completed at 2:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The story of this work is best told by the official figures. From 1 to 6 P. M. on Saturday 1,857 tons were put aboard; 7 P. M. to 11 P. M., 1,033 tons; midnight until 6 A. M. yesterday, 1,341 tons; 7 A. M. to 2:45 P. M., 1,313 tons, a total of 5,544 tons. The Lusitania had upon arrival 630 tons in her bunkers. She consumed 160 tons in port.

Filling the larder was even more of a task than coaling the Lusitania, and Chief Steward Allison had his hands full, seeing that orders were carried out. The liner arrived here with supplies low, for she had carried more than the ordinary complement of passengers. It was nearly sailing time when the report was brought to Mr. Allison that the last of the provisions were in the cold storage rooms. Some of the big items on the steward's list were 16,000 pounds of beef, 1,600 pounds of lamb, 4,000 pounds of mutton, 4,000 pounds of fish, 2,000 pounds of corned beef, 21,000 eggs, and 4 tons of vegetables.

"Everything has been done satisfactorily," said Chief Steward Allison. "Great care has been exercised, because we wanted no cause for complaint. Some might think that because of the haste in getting away the service would not be as good as when we have more time. On this trip, as on every other, the same attention has been given to details as though we were to lay up here for a week."

Almost as soon as each arriving passenger left his or her stateroom, stewards were gathering up the linen, and even while the passengers' baggage was coming ashore the bales of soiled linen were being tossed to the lower pier. An hour after the liner had made fast the wash started on the way to the laundry. Forty thousand pieces went and were washed and back on board the Lusitania within twenty-five hours. The linen steward admitted it was quite a feat, but he explained that in Liverpool the facilities are as good as in New York.

The Lusitania brought to port 843 tons of cargo, and she took out almost the same amount. Beyond the removal of some express packages, there was no attempt to load or unload. It was said that there was only a small amount of perishable stuff between decks. Part of this cargo, it is said, are lemons. They are now on their fourth trip across the Atlantic, and their value as a commercial product is a question which will be best determined when they are unloaded. This consignment of lemons, according to the story told on board, first crossed the Atlantic from an Italian port to New York. When they were landed it was found there was a better market for lemons in England. So they made their second voyage, this time to Liverpool in the Lusitania. When the vessel got there labor agitation had destroyed the market. The lemons remained on board. They were off on their fourth transatlantic trip yesterday.

The official sailing time of the Lusitania was 6:01 P. M. She took out 104 first, 92 second, and about 300 steerage passengers and 1,387 bags of mail. There were few at the pier to see her depart, but the few gave her an enthusiastic send-off as she began to move out into the river. Supt. Roberts had an extra wagon waiting in case of an emergency call for a mail carrier at the last minute. The call did not come, and five minutes before sailing time Capt. Roberts reported to Mr. Sumner, agent of the line, that the last mail bag was on board and the vessel was ready to leave her pier.

Capt. Charles, the commander of the Lusitania, was in fine humor when he went on the bridge to give the signal for casting off the lines.

"We could have been off at 4 o'clock this afternoon," he said. "Coal and provisions were on board, and we could have gone as well then as now. It was necessary to keep to schedule, and so we simply waited the coming of the mail and the word to go. Weather conditions are favorable, and I hope to make a quick passage. The work in port was excellently done, for the facilities here are even better than in Liverpool. I hope to bring the vessel across the Atlantic three times in eighteen days. The passengers who are booked to leave Liverpool on the 9th will not be much delayed, and we will catch up with our interrupted schedule."

Among those who sailed on the Lusitania were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allison, G. A. Brereton, G. B. Brownlee, Miss Eleanor Crownfield, J. H. Dunn, Baron Paul Forster, Countess G. Della Gherardesca of Italy and the Countess Charlotte Gherardesca, Paul Ginther, Dr. W. F. Kalle, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Lomax, Mrs. James McMullan, Mr. and Mrs. H. I. Miller, Mr. and Mrs James Proctor, Arthur Rushforth, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Shartel, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Sinclair, Alexander de Stalewsky, Sterling H. Thomas, F. P. Younghusband, and E. Berry Wall, who is going to Paris, where his mother is ill.

On her record trip to carry the Christmas mails the Mauretania was in port thirty-seven hours and twenty-one minutes. She arrived at her pier at 4:41 A. M. Friday, Dec. 16. She sailed at 6:02 P. M. on Saturday, Dec. 17.

BEATTIE WILL TELL HIS STORY TO-DAY

STATE MAY SURPRISE HIM

Certain Witnesses Who Will Be Used in Rebuttal Have Been Withheld Purposely by Prosecution.

CHESTERFIELD COURT HOUSE, Va., Sept. 3.—Under a wide-spreading oak tree in the twilight to-night sat Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., and beside him was Henry M. Smith, Jr., his lawyer, talking rapidly and earnestly to the man who to-morrow will take the witness stand in an effort to clear himself of the grim charge against him. While they talked, not less than fifty yards away on the grass under another tree reclined the twelve men in whose hands the life of the prisoner hangs. Scattered around them were sections of Sunday newspapers.

The conference between the accused and his counsel was brief. Mr. Smith shook the hand of the prisoner warmly and bespoke his best wishes for the events of the morrow.

"I'm very glad to get the chance to go on the stand," said the prisoner. "They couldn't keep me off if they tried."

"Did somebody try to keep you from the stand?"

"Yes. Some people thought I would weaken my case if I testified, but I have told them, and I say now, that I'd go on the stand and tell my story if I thought I were going to be killed the next minute. I want to tell the jury my story, and when it hears it I'm confident its verdict will establish my innocence."

When Beattie had finished talking he bit nervously at a toothpick. For a few minutes he stood alone with the jailer, watching his attorney step into an automobile in the road. He waved his hand in farewell and stood for an interval under the tree. A big collie dog came dashing up, and the accused man fondled it for a minute, and soon sent it scampering across the green after a stone that he tossed away. Beattie's liberty was short, and soon he went back to the stuffy stone jail, where a dozen negro prisoners and a family of rats furnished his only diversion.

Attorney Smith talked hopefully about the testimony which he expects the prisoner to give to-morrow.

"I am sure Henry Beattie will clear himself," he said. "What has been said against him has been almost entirely circumstantial evidence, and remember what Mr. Kestleberg's testimony showed about the danger of accepting circumstantial evidence. The discovery of Mr. Kestleberg as a witness was an accident, and when we found out what he knew we literally had to drag him to court. He shows that it was he whom the boys saw fixing that automobile on the night of the murder, and does not that cast a big doubt as to other evidence which the prosecution has brought out?

"It's a question of veracity between Henry and Paul," continued the lawyer, "and I reckon the jury will soon decide the issue when they hear the prisoner tell his own story of the affair.

"In my experience as a criminal lawyer I always have found that an innocent man wants to take the stand to tell his own story to the jury. I always leave it to the prisoner himself to determine whether or not he shall do this. Beattie has been absolutely insistent from the first that he tell his story in his own words."

Beattie did not look as bright to-day as he has on other occasions since the trial began. His face was pallid, and his eyelids sagged, as if sleepless. The uncomfortable little cell that he occupied was cheerless. To-night two dainty little girls, one in pink and the other in white, proudly brought the prisoner his supper.

Labor Day is expected to bring an unusually large crowd to the Court House, but as its capacity is limited to barely a hundred there will be a scramble for seats at an early hour. The prisoner will take the stand immediately after court convenes at 10:30 o'clock.

The prosecution is prepared to attack the prisoner's story with a merciless fire. Prosecutor Wendenburg is primed for the occasion with dozens of letters and statements with which to surprise the accused. In the rebuttal which will follow on Tuesday the Commonwealth will bring to the stand many a witness which it has purposely withheld until the story of the accused is before the jury. It will not be surprising to see Beulah Binford on the stand confronting the prisoner.

"Whether Beulah is called to the stand or not," said Mr. Smith to-day, will depend on the revelations made by Henry in his testimony. If she is called it probably will be by the Commonwealth, and we wish they would do so."

Attorney Smith referred to reports of an alleged effort of the prisoner to communicate with the Binford girl while she occupied a near-by cell in a Richmond jail, and of a discovery of a packet of letters on a discharged trusty.

"The letters which the prosecution have," explained Mr. Smith, "were merely personal letters from members of the family of the prisoner to him, and in no way concerned the Binford girl. Henry told me that he hoped the prosecution would produce them, as it only would show the kind of tactics they have been using to try to convict him."

WOMAN KILLED IN COLLISION.

Electric Car Strikes Carriage at Bangor Crossing.

BANGOR, Me., Sept. 3.—One woman was killed and another woman and a man were badly injured when an electric car of the Bangor & Old Town Street Railway crashed into a carriage to-day.

Miss Emma Webb, an artist, well known in society circles in this city, was killed.

Mrs. Lydia Baxter of New York suffered a fracture of the collarbone and many bruises, but probably will recover.

J. W. Hunting of Corinth was badly bruised. The carriage turned on to the tracks in front of the car, which was concealed by a clump of trees on a curve.

DENY CALLING STRIKE ON ILLINOIS CENTRAL

RUMOR FROM PADUCAH, KY.

President Markham to Confer with Federation Officers Again, but Road is Prepared for Trouble.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—A dispatch received in Chicago late to-night from Paducah, Ky., said that the 700 men in the shops of the Illinois Central Railroad at that point had received notice to strike. According to this report bulletins have been posted in the shops calling the strike for Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock unless orders to the contrary are sent out by the Advisory Committee of the Shopmen's Federation.

The report from Paducah also went on to state that the strike call had been posted in all the shops along the road, and that 12,000 men would, as a result, hold themselves in readiness to go out because of the refusal of the road's officers to recognize the new shop system federation.

Labor officials and officials of the Illinois Central in Chicago denied, however, all knowledge of such a call.

At the Burnside shops, which are the biggest on the road, the night watchman was the only person on duty. He said that the bulletin card there contained no notice of a strike call.

President McCreery of the Federation of Shop Employes denied that he had issued an order calling for a general strike, and Secretary Bowen of the federation said:

"There is absolutely nothing to that report of a strike call. There isn't even a reasonably good foundation for the report. We have issued no call."

All the Illinois Central officials who could be reached to-night expressed astonishment at the report of a strike call when the road was still negotiating with the men in an effort to reach some sort of an agreement.

"I had not heard of the report before," said President Markham. "Of course it is possible that telegrams may have arrived at the office on Sunday which I have not seen, but I think that there is no truth in the report.

"It would be a very unusual thing for the men to call a strike while they were still making an effort to get another conference. I received a letter from the international officers on Friday asking an appointment for Tuesday. This whole situation has been rather unusual. The men have broken their contracts and tried to deal with us regardless of that fact, but I do not believe that they would go so far as to call a strike while their officers are awaiting our reply."

Mr. Markham said that he had planned to grant another conference with the international officers on Tuesday, as they requested, and was only waiting the expiration of the legal holiday before sending them a formal notice to that effect.

"I have not heard a thing about this," said T. J. Foley, Assistant General Manager. "If any strike call had been issued I would have heard of it long before this."

M. K. Barnum, General Superintendent of Motive Power of the Illinois Central, issued this statement to-night:

"I do not believe a strike will occur, but if it does it will not interfere with the running of trains, as the employes in the transportation service will not be involved. The Illinois Central is in better shape than ever before in its history, so far as rolling stock is concerned. It is all in good condition. We just received 115 new engines, and none of them will need to be sent to the shops for a year or eighteen months. Strikes of shopmen never interfere with the running of trains, and would cause less inconvenience now than at any other time."

It is asserted by labor men here that the five international Presidents now in San Francisco are anxious to avert trouble, giving as a reason the unsettled business conditions and the fact that the roads are in a better condition to fight a strike than ever before. They have learned that every piece of rolling stock has been repaired and that the roads could stand a struggle for months. While such a strike might be successful on some lines, they fear for the result on others.

HURT WHEN STOOP FALLS.

Mother and Children Drop Fifteen Feet Into Areaway.

A wooden stoop in the rear of a frame tenement at 1,777 Sedgwick Avenue, Bronx, said to have been rotten with age, gave way with seven persons standing and sitting on it yesterday afternoon. All of the seven were injured, a few of them seriously. The drop to the areaway was about fifteen feet.

Mrs. Sadie Sheehan and her two children, Morris, aged 5, and William, 3, received bruises, and were taken to Fordham Hospital. Mrs. Alice Kenny, who had her four-months-old daughter, May, in her arms, suffered contusions of the left hip. Her baby also is in a serious condition, and both were taken to the hospital. A large splinter had entered the child's cheek. Mrs. Alice Breavis and her husband seized the railing of the platform, just above the stoop, when the crash came and swung in midair. Then they dropped into the areaway. They were only slightly injured.

The tenement house, the police learned, was constructed twenty-two years ago.

scoped against the heavier car ahead. It was the sixth car of the train which was lifted from the track. Why this car, in the middle of the train, should have been derailed is a puzzle to railroad men.

According to Engineer John Dunn of the steam train, the accident was caused by the sudden and so far unexplained failure of his air brakes to work. His train is run as an express from Long Island City to Hammel Station, the first station past the long trestle which crosses Jamaica Bay. Since he had had no occasion to stop, Dunn had no idea that his brakes might prove balky when he shut off power and started to apply them gradually for the stop at Hammel. He noticed first that the brakes did not take hold and opened his air a little more. Their continued failure to operate convinced him in a second that something was wrong with the mechanism, and whistling a signal for the application of the hand brakes, he began to open his reverse lever a fraction of an inch at a time in the hope of reducing his speed in this way.

His momentum was reduced somewhat, but Dunn saw quickly that before his train could be halted it would crash into the electric train standing at Holland Station. He whistled a warning to the train ahead and stuck to his post, trying to slow down his train, though he knew that in an instant or two the crash must come.

When it did, Dunn and his fireman were thrown heavily against the front of the engine cab, and though both were bruised, neither was hurt seriously. It was being tossed about in the cars which injured those of the passengers who were hurt, though many were bruised who did not wait for the attention of doctors but hurried away from the wreck at once.

Calls were sent to all the physicians in the neighborhood, and Dr. Weinstein came from the new Rockaway Beach Hospital. The injured persons were assisted to the porches of near-by houses and hotels, and field hospitals of a sort were established there.

A fire alarm was sent in to put out the fire which had started about the car resting on the third rail, and this blaze was quenched quickly when the power had been turned off. It was four hours, however, before the tracks were cleared to traffic.

It was said by residents of Holland and Hammel that the steam train from Long Island City always follows closely behind the electric train, which starts from the Atlantic Avenue Station in Brooklyn, and that when the latter is at Holland Station the steam train is generally pulling into Hammel Station, only a short distance away.

MOTHER AND SON KILLED.

Hurled from Railroad Bridge Into Canal Basin 100 Feet Down.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J., Sept. 3.—Mrs. Anna Leiser and her five-year-old son Ervin, while crossing the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge over the Morris Canal to-day, were struck by a freight train and hurled into the canal basin, 100 feet below. Both were alive when picked up, but died a few minutes later. Mrs. Leiser's brother, John O'Connell, escaped death by clinging to a girder of the bridge.

O'Connell and his sister and nephew were walking to Easton, Penn., to take a train for New York City, where they were to visit a relative. They appear not to have heard the approach of the train until it was almost upon them.

EXPRESS KILLS A MAN.

Struck at a Grade Crossing by a Long Beach Train.

An unidentified man was struck and killed at a grade crossing at Railroad Avenue, East New York, last night by an express train bound for Long Beach.

The accident occurred on the Atlantic Division of the Long Island Railroad. Two women who stood on the other side of the tracks say they did not see any one on the tracks and that the gates were down. The first they knew of the accident was when they heard the whistle and saw the man tossed in the air by the express, which was going at high speed. The body was removed to the Liberty Avenue Police Station. The man was about forty years old and weighed 155 pounds. He was clean shaven and dressed in a dark suit of clothes. There were no cards or letters on the body to identify it.

GREATEST THRONGS OF TOURISTS ARRIVE

W. W. Warden, H. J. Morton, C. W. Sawyer, and S. K. Gibson. The Wisconsin men were M. Schiller and M. N. Glaser.

An incident of the trip of the Rotterdam was a lecture in the saloon on Thursday night by Miss Mary E. Chapin, exponent of the "New Thought." Miss Chapin returns from Paris, where she has been lecturing. She went abroad on July 15.

The British tennis players who arrived on the Adriatic were C. P. Dixon, A. H. Lowe, and A. E. Beamish. They will meet the American team in the preliminary matches for the Davis Cup, and the team that wins will go to Australia as challengers for the cup, which is now held by Australian players. The Britishers were met by Marshall McLean, Robert Wren, and Lyle E. Mahan as representatives of the American Tennis Association.

Justice Scott, who was on the Lapland, was surprised when told that it had been rumored that Tammany might not nominate him this Fall for another term. He said it was the first he had heard about it.

Also on the Lapland was Miss Mary Williams of Rye Beach, who was the fiancée of Daniel E. Garrison, the St. Louis man who committed suicide in the Waldorf on Saturday. Miss Williams had been informed by wireless that Mr. Garrison had been hurt, but did not know that he was dead until she reached the pier. She was accompanied by her mother, and left for her home immediately on landing, Mrs. Williams remaining behind to see to the passing of the baggage.

DENEEN'S LEG BROKEN IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Illinois Governor Thrown from Machine While Trying to Avoid Hitting a Team of Horses.

DISRUPTS POLITICAL PLANS

Will Be Forced to Keep to His Bed for the Next Five or Six Weeks—Other Motor Mishaps.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 3.—While trying to turn aside a team of horses into which his automobile was backing, Gov. Deneen this afternoon was thrown from the running board of his machine, breaking both bones of the left leg, one and a half inches above the ankle.

The accident occurred one and a half miles east of Divernon. In the auto besides the Governor were Mrs. Deneen, Miss Frances Deneen, the Deneen baby, Otto Swanson, chauffeur for the Governor, and the baby's nurse. A farmer telephoned Dr. L. C. Taylor of Springfield to meet the Governor's automobile upon arrival at the executive mansion, and a hurried run to this city was made. Dr. Taylor immediately administered an anaesthetic and reduced the fractures.

In two or three days an X-ray examination of the fracture will be made, and if the setting is found perfect the leg will be placed in a plaster cast. It will be five or six weeks before the Governor will be able to leave his bed.

The accident is particularly unfortunate because the Governor is carrying the burden of important political problems in addition to his regular official duties. He had been expected to announce in the next week whether he will become a candidate for a third term as Governor or for United States Senator, and as soon as his decision and announcement were made it was expected he would enter upon an active campaign of the State.

STEAL POLICE AUTO.

Pittsburgh Thieves Get Away with Car Equipped to Hunt Them Down.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 3.—Automobile thieves at midnight Saturday stole a Police Headquarters automobile equipped with firearms, handcuffs, and other police paraphernalia especially provided for emergencies. Twenty-four hours have passed since the big car was stolen from in front of the fashionable clubhouse of the Pittsburgh Athletic Association in Grant Boulevard, and the entire police force of 1,200 is still trying to find a trace of it.

The theft of the machine had probably been planned days ahead, for it was taken from a line of about fifteen others. The idea is that it was done to get even for the arrest of a supposed member of the gang several days ago. When the pair of detectives in charge of the machine returned to the boulevard the car was gone.

For six weeks of more burglars in automobiles have been operating in Pittsburgh and its suburbs. Safe cracking has been their specialty. The police auto was provided especially for pursuit of the gang. Many of the fifteen other chauffeurs told the police of hearing a yell of derision from the occupants of the stolen car as it sped away in the direction of the Carnegie Institute. The remaining police automobiles are being carefully watched.

SIT IN WINE CELLAR TO STOP HAY FEVER

Hotel Manager Discovered the "Cure," and How His Patrons Try It.

BREWERY VAULTS GOOD, TOO

But 'Tis the Frost and Not the Stored Goods That Brings Relief—Some Regular Patients.

The strange actions of a gentleman afflicted with hay fever at the Hotel Breslin have attracted the attention of the patrons there for some days. Regularly every morning, even on the hottest days, he has rushed through the corridor in a heavy fur coat, to the frieght elevator at the rear of the office desk, which leads to the basement regions. Just as regularly he reappears after half an hour or so, rubbing his hands, as if he had just been sleighing on a very cold day.

Yesterday shortly after this man had made his usual two trips going and returning, two young women in Persian lamb coats sauntered jauntily past the desk and were put into the freight elevator. This was too much for the curiosity of a certain old lady who was sitting near the desk, waiting for her son to come to take her to luncheon.

"I beg your pardon," she said, addressing the clerk, "but I have seen many strange sights in this corridor this morning which I should like to have explained. Why are these people dressed in Winter fashion? Why do they wear bearskin and Persian lamb garments at this season of the year, and why do they descend to the unfashionable quarters of the hotel?"

Then the explanation was made which afterward spread like wildfire through the corridor, so that now any bellboy at the Breslin can tell you of the marvelous hay fever cure.

The gentleman and the two ladies and many more besides are taking an artificial means of getting an early frost and thus curing themselves of hay fever.

Every morning for thirty or forty minutes they sit in the artifically cooled wine cellar of the Breslin in an atmosphere of from 30 to 40 degrees. The result is said to be most beneficial.

C. C. Nobles, the manager of the hotel is himself a hay fever victim, and he takes the credit for the discovery of the cure. He first tried it several months ago. Since then he has had some difficulty in persuading other people that it is efficacious. At last, however, he has succeeded.

"Everybody laughed at first when I said that sitting in a cooled wine cellar for a little time would relieve hay fever," he said. "But finally I succeeded in getting C. K. Bailey of Mississippi, who suffers greatly from hay fever, to try it. He was made so much better that everybody who is afflicted with the malady about the hotel now has tried it. Several people in fact have come to try it.

"It does not cure hay fever, of course, but it brings almost instant relief, a relief which lasts from twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Then it becomes necessary to repeat the trip to the wine cellar. Of course any cold spot will do if the temperature is low enough. The idea occurred to me first because it is generally known that hay fever disappears with the first frost. I noticed one day that there was plenty of frost in the wine cellar, and when I tried sitting there for a time I found almost instant relief."

The cure has been tried with success at several of the big breweries in the West. Warren D. Fuerst, a retired financier of St. Louis, has been entirely cured, it is said, by spending half an hour each day for two weeks at a brewery. So far as is known, however, the Breslin boasts the only tried cure in New York. It may be added that the patients who sit in the wine cellar are not allowed to drink the wines.

CYCLIST HIT BY A CAR.

Preparing for Coney Island Run To-day and Is Now Near Death.

While riding west in Nineteenth Street at the head of a file of twenty-five ther bicyclists last night, John Saloni, 22 years old, of 314 Avene A, in trying to avoid a collision with a northbound Second Avenue car, was thrown from his wheel and sustained a fracture of the skull. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was said that he was near death.

Soloni and his felleow riders were practicing in preparation for the big bicycle parade which is to be given on the Coney Island bicycle path to-day. Thi parade was urged by bicycle enthusiasts after receiving word that it was the intention to tear up the old Coney Island path to give way for the widening of an automobile road. Fearing that they would be deprived of their road the enthusiasts thought it would be a good idea to give a demonstration on Labor Day which would show that that there are still many bicyclists in the city.

Last night there were practice spins in all parts of the city. Most of the riders use racing vehicles with low handle bars and high saddles, and when riding at full speed it is dificult to see ahead very far. Saloni's bicycle was of this type, and it is believed that he failed to see the Second Avenue car approaching. The car passed over the frame of the bicycle, but Saloni's body was hurled free of the tracks.

ALLEGORY IN PARADE OF LABOR'S HOSTS

More Elaborate Design Than at First Intended Will Symbolize Life and Toil.

BRITISH TARS IN PROCESSION

Delegates of the Organization Formed to Befriend the McNamaras Will Be in Line.

Final preparations for the celebration of Labor Day were made yesterday by the unions of this city, which will commemorate it with the usual parade and outings. The principal feature of the day will be the parade of organized workingmen, arranged by the Central Federated Union, which will start downtown from the plaza at Fifty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue at 10 o'clock in the morning. The line of march is down Fifth Avenue to Washington Square, where the procession will disband. Individual unions and central bodies will hold outdoor festivals in the afternoon.

The Sailors and Firemen's Union of Great Britain will be represented in the Central Federated Union parade. Matthew Tearle, American representative of the British union, has made arrangements to have a delegation from two transatlantic liners in port march with the American workmen.

The British tars will join the members of the Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union at 8 A. M. at 51 South Street and march with them uptown, where they will fall in line with the fourth division of the parade. The Harbor Boatmen's Union will also be in line in this division.

The Sailors and Firemen's Union of Great Britain will carry a banner with an inscription recalling the recent great strike in England. It will read:

"The seamen of Great Britain have beaten the Shipping Federation. What can the seamen of the world do?"

Before they start uptown the members of the Harbor Boatmen's Union will hold a meeting at 214 West Street.

The Cloakmakers' Union, which had a strike not long ago involving 75,000 men and women, will be the largest body in line. It was estimated yesterday by Herman Grossman, organizer of the union, that 35,000 cloakmakers, men and women, will march. The cloakmakers will be headed by the joint board of their unions. Then will follow Local No. 1, consisting of the operators; No. 9, representing the tailors; No. 17, representing the Italian branch; Local No. 23, representing the reefermakers, the skirtmakers, the pressers, the Russian and Polish branches, the cloak buttonholemakers, and the cloak cutters.

It was announced yesterday on behalf of the Parade Committee of the Women's Trade Union League that its float, representing Life and Labor, on which a child playing with a doll as a protest against child labor was to be seated, will be more elaborate in its design than was first intended. Instead of the child and the doll, two women representing Life and Labor, attired in allegorical costumes, will stand on a raised carpeted platform in the centre of the float, bearing shields and clasping hands. Below them there will be four women, and on a lower tier six women, dressed in white and carrying the colors of the league, which are blue and yellow, and bunches of goldenrod, the official flower of the league. Every member of the league in line will also carry a bunch of goldenrod and will wear a cap and sash with the league colors.

In accordance with a rule established many years ago, everything in the parade that is worn or carried must be union-made, even to the shoes of the horses which the Marshals will ride. In some of the past parades of the Central Federated Union on Labor Day horses which were found to be shod in a non-union shop had to be taken out of the line of march. Before the parade starts a special committee will make a rapid inspection to see if everything is strictly union.

There will be many emblems and mottoes condemning the arrest of the McNamaras on the charge of complicity in the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times building. The McNamara Conference, composed of delegates of unions and formed for the purpose of collecting funds for the defence of the McNamaras, will have a special place in line.

A good showing is expected to be made by the housesmiths, excavators, tunnel and subway constructors, and the teamsters and shop and building trades. The various unions in line in these trades will wear distinctive uniforms. The unions in the clothing trades are expected to make the largest numerical showing.

The Grand Marshal of the parade is Matthew McConville, delegate of the Safety Engineers' Union. The arrangement of the unions as to their places in line in the six divisions of the parade has already been published.

Among the other organizations of labor which will celebrate to-day is the New York District Council of the Brotherhood of Butchers, whose members will have their annual outing and games at Donnelly's Grove, College Point, Long Island. This body takes in six locals of butcher workmen. District 220 of the Knights of Labor of Brooklyn will have a picnic and games at Gerken's Glendale Schuetzen Park. A parade of the unions in Newark, N. J., will take place, in which it is expected that 20,000 workers will take part.

LABOR'S RELATION TO CHURCH.

Workers Can Gain Ecclesiastical Control, Says Preacher, if They Will.

Labor problems, particularly the relations of the Church to workingmen, were discussed by several ministers in their sermons yesterday. At the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, the pulpit of the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant was occupied by the Rev. Andrew F. Underhill, assistant pastor. He said that the Church was far more democratic than people usually gave it credit for being.

"There is no reason why the laboring classes should not control the Church," said Mr. Underhill, "if they would simply attend the services. Any one who attends a church for a year may vote at the Vestry election."

He declared that the Church had always stood for the principles insisted on by the labor union, especially the moral principles of the labor organizations. The Church might be an important force in settling labor disputes if Church people would let good fellowship take the place of class feeling, as they should, according to Christian doctrine. Before the Church can be a great help to the laboring man, he must first make himself a factor in the Church.

Dr. Walter Laidlaw, Secretary of the Federation of Churches, spoke at the St. Nicholas Avenue Presbyterian Church. "The churches of New York are interested in four measures affecting vitally the workers of the city," said Dr. Laidlaw. "These measures are: The fifty-four-hour week for boys under 18 and all women, a weekly day of rest for all workers, the conservation of the anti-gambling laws, and encouragement, by a lower rate of taxation on buildings than on land, of the men who put up buildings to house workers."

At the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church the pastor, Dr. Walter D. Buchanan, said that Labor Day should be considered as a protest against the evils of extravagance and pleasure-seeking. It should remind us, said the preacher, that we were brought into the world to work. From the earliest times it had been found that this was the only way to contentment. The English strike had done a great deal, he said, to impress people here and abroad with the importance of workingmen in our civilization, and from that standpoint it had been beneficial.

Yesterday marked the first meeting of the season at the Labor Temple, Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus of the Armour Institute of Technology at Chicago, was the speaker, and he took for his subject "The Lyric Interpretation of Life." It was an address on music, which the speaker said harmonized and vitalized all the other arts. Music can be made to interpret all life, said Dr. Gunsaulus, where it is accompanied in individuals by a sense of humor. "The man with a sense of humor can find a symphony in the ugliest flower and the most distorted fact of nature," said Dr. Gunsaulus. "Life has its every representation in nature, and the man whose soul is attuned to the music of the infinite will sooner or later find the answering tone for every mood and fancy."

CALLS PEACE TALK A SHAM.

Max Nordau Says European Powers Are Playing a Game of Hypocrisy.

The so-called European sentiment for peace and the settlement of difficulties by arbitration is characterized by Max Nordau in an article in the current number of The American Hebrew, as nothing more than a "vast sham and pretense." The statesmen who are afield with talk for peace, Nordau contends, are merely "smooth-tongued hypocrites."

The data on which the scientist and critic bases his views has to do with the most recent changes in the attitude of several European nations toward the Jews.

"The plague of anti-Semitism," he says, "is at present marching around the earth as if it were an epidemic. Jew-hatred is now breaking out evreywhere into a white flame. Even in the lands where we are best off we need only put our ears to the ground to hear beneath the thin superficialities of official regard for constitutional equality of all citizens the roaring of the waters of Judaeophobia. The Jew may be abused, robbed, pillaged and even murdered without there being the slightest protection for him under the law or on the part of the authorities—even the rights accorded to the very animals for the protection of which animal protection societies are everywhere active."

ITALIAN MURDERED AS POLICE INFORMER

Shot to Death, Detectives Say, by a Notorious Member of the Black Hand.

POLICE MAKE FIVE ARRESTS

The Killing Done in the Rear of Tenements Long Known as the Resort of Kidnappers.

Another murder, credited to the Black Hand, was committed early yesterday morning in the heart of the Italian settlement in East Sixty-third Street. Late in the afternoon a single-barreled shotgun, which according to the police was used in the killing, was found by Detective De Gillio of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station, and it was said that a clue had been obtained to the identity of the slayer.

The murdered man was Frank Russo, 22 years old, a Sicilian laborer. He came here from Italy eight years ago, and for the last seven months lived and had boarded with the family of Dominick Tobea on the second floor of 404 East Sixty-third Street. He supported his old father and mother in Sicily, sending them $25 every month.

The police say they know him to have been a notorious member of the Black Hand.

The link which connects the murder with the Black Hand is the murdered man's past. Until seven months ago he lived at 332 East Sixty-third Street, the centre of three tenements in which Commissioner Flynn and his men made a raid for kidnappers last Dec. 8, taking ten prisoners. The three houses, 330, 332, and 334, have been the rendezvous of criminals for a score of years, according to the police. In this vicinity the Scimeca boy who was held in ransom for three months was found. Here also the dead body of a kidnapped child was once found in a chimney. Commissioner Flynn's raid resulted in one of the men kidnappers being sent to prison for forty years and a woman for thirty, and put an end to kidnapping for six months.

Taken for an Informer.

Russo lived at 332 at the time Commissioner Flynn's raid was made. Less than a month afterward he moved to 404 East Sixty-third Street. He was murdered directly behind the tenement in which he lived when the raid was made, and this is the circumstance of the crime which leads to the supposition that he was killed by his fellow-Sicilians because of information he was believed to have given to the police.

Russo left his boarding house on Saturday night at 7 o'clock. He went to a moving-picture show at Second Avenue and Sixty-third Street, and about 9 o'clock dropped into the restaurant of John and Nicholas Salvo, on the ground floor of 330 East Sixty-third Street, one of the notorious trio of tenements. Later he went into the rear yard, where a "boscha" court extends the length of 330, 332, and 334. He played at "boscha," which consists of rolling croquet balls on a sandy court as near a certain object as possible, and then sat down at a table at the side of the court to watch other players. He finally fell asleep at the table about midnight, it is supposed.

Above the sleeping man was suspended a bright gas light, and the game continued long after midnight, with the aid of this light. Above the lamp, and not quite covering the sleeping man, was a board roof, extending the length of the court. It was about five feet above his head, and to the rear and parallel to the court stretched a high board fence, only slightly lower than the board roof over the court. The table at which the sleeping man was sitting was therefore between the board fence and the roofed court, in which about ten Italians were playing their game. How long the game continued is not known, but at 2:30 A. M. a shot was heard and Russo gave a cry of distress.

"I'm shot! I'm dying!" he exclaimed as he fell dying, his friends say.

The nearest fixed police posts are at Sixty-second Street and First Avenue and Sixty-third Street and Second Avenue, less than two blocks distant, and the patrolmen from these posts were on the scene almost immediately. From John Salvo, proprietor of the restaurant and "boscha" court, they got the names of witnesses. Then Capt. Ward of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station and several detectives, including De Gillio, arrived.

Five Arrests Made.

The body of the murdered man was taken to the Morgue, and a search with a lantern was made through the tenements. The police found an old Springfield rifle in a closet of the third floor of No. 332, and arrested the owner, Tony Peppia, under the new Sullivan dangerous weapon law, charging him with having a gun in his possession. Four other arrests were made—Joseph Furno and John Salvo of 330 East Sixty-third Street, who were taken as material witnesses; Joseph Baccagar of the same address, who was arrested for having a shotgun in his possession, and Joseph De Lorenzo, who was charged with having a loaded revolver in his home. The last named was the only one held later by Magistrate Breen in the Yorkville Court. He was charged with a misdemeanor under the new weapon law.

Investigation showed that Russo had been shot in the small of the back with buckshot, seventy-two entering his body. The murderer is supposed to have fired from a fourth floor rear window or from the fire escape of one of the three houses. One vacant apartment was found on the fourth floor rear of No. 332, and a window in the apartment was half open.

About 6 o'clock last night de Gillio, who had worked on the case since 3 A. M., walked into the police station with a single-barreled shotgun. The barrel was rusty, but it had lately been fired. There were finger prints on the stock and barrel, and these are considered a valuable clue to the murderer. The butt was partly covered with sand, and blades of dry grass were twisted around the trigger guard. It looked as if it had been tossed into the back yard from a height.

De Gillio also had in his possession some gun wads found on the roof over the court, and it was said that these fitted the gun. The detective would not say where he had found the shotgun, but said:

"This is the gun that killed Russo."

It was said later that the gun had been found concealed in a house behind a flour barrel.

NEW QUEENS BUILDING RULE.

All Encroachments on City Streets Must Cease, Says Gresser.

Borough President Gresser of Queens has issued an order to John J. Simmons, Superintendent of Buildings in Queens, directing that in the future no permits for buildings be granted where the plans provide for obstructions beyond the street line.

The order is to go into effect at once, and at the bureau it was said that it would revolutionize building in the borough. Plans for at least one hundred buildings, principally business blocks, now in the department for approval will have to be rejected because they come within the restrictions.

It has been the custom in Queens to allow the erection of stoops to private dwellings and apartment houses which project not more than four feet over the street line. Block after block of houses with such projections has been erected in the Ridgewood, Woodhaven, and Corona sections of the bofough. Bay windows have been allowed to project from one to three feet. Store windows with not more than three feet projections have been allowed. Nearly every business building erected in the Jamaica, Richmond Hill, Flushing, and Long Island City sections had this privilege. All permits, however, are revokable.

The order has been given by President Grosser following the receipt of a note from Corporation Counsel Watson recommending that the law regarding encroachments be adhered to.

The PACKARD "SIX"

Ask the man who owns one

THE Packard "Six" has arrived. We want as many people as possible to see it and to ride in it. It will be on exhibition at our store when not on the road in demonstration.

In order that engagements for demonstrations may not conflict, we are booking them in advance. You may arrange by telephone, letter or visit for a ride in this supreme motor car.

The Packard "Six" not only represents the culmination of thirteen years of progressive manufacture of motor cars, exclusively of the highest type, but it is the result of three years of engineering work and experiment concentrated upon it by the Packard Motor Car Company in order to produce a "Six" fulfilling the natural expectation that a Packard "Six" should be truly the pre-eminent motor car.

It cost over $300,000 to develop this model. It was created carefully, unit by unit, and each feature was accepted only after the test of experience. The Packard "Six" has left a trail of dust sixty thousand miles long over the Rockies and Appalachians and all the hills between. By its performance throughout fifteen months of arduous testing it has passed the judgment of every engineer and every executive in the Packard Company.

Paris sends us her smartest
Women's Tailored Suit Model exclusive with Saks and special tomorrow at 39.50

¶ A refreshingly chic little garment which admirably displays the Parisian facility for creating new style effects. A really excellent example of that genius which can improvise eternally on style by the simple expedient of remodeling a line or changing the geography of a button.

¶ It cost us 1200 francs to land this tailored suit, or approximately 240.00, but we have reproduced it at less than one-sixth of that amount, without in any degree sacrificing the merit of the original.

¶ Made of exceptional quality French broadcloth, and indescribably effective in design. The jacket is 30 inches long, has a small round collar and extremely large pointed revers, and buttons abruptly to one side with velvet covered buttons.

¶ The braid ornamenting the entire garment is of a new and attractive pattern and the collar and revers are edged with panned velvet one inch wide. Skirt is high bodice effect with loose panel back and braided to match jacket. All braiding and trimming in self colors, which include navy, wistaria, Copenhagen blue, brown, green, smoke or leather. Fourth Floor.

An early Autumn offering of Smart Apparel
for Misses and Small Women tomorrow

As always, the note of distinction dominates in the handsome Fall garments which we are now showing for the younger generation of women. This applies not only to the models selected for this offering, but to the excellence of workmanship and to the delectability of fabrics and colorings. Sizes 14-16-18 years. Second Floor.

Misses' Tailored Suits, handsome models, in the newest imported fabrics and exhibiting a variety of collars and revers. Many new designs in skirts; and the coats, which are lined with peau de cygne or Skinner satin to match, are just a little longer this season than formerly. Color combinations are exquisite.

Conservatively priced from 29.50 to 55.00

Misses' Coats, suitable for any occasion, in double faced cloths, plain or plaid back. Sailor or shawl collar, and Raglan or plain tailored sleeves. Extremely stylish.

ARREST PORTUGUESE TROOPS

Regiment Which Shouts for Monarchy Arrested by Loyal Command.

LISBON, via Frontier, Sept. 3.—The royalist movement in the north seems to be gaining ground. There have been several cases of flagrant insubordination, but none more pronounced than that on the part of the Eleventh Infantry, a report of which has just been received here. The regiment has been quartered at Braga, a town noted for its royalist and Catholic leanings. Recently it was ordered transferred to Setubal, to the south, and when the men entered the town they burst into thunderous cheers for the monarchy and Capt. Coucière, the royalist leader. The authorities summoned the loyal Eighteenth Regiment, which surrounded and seized the insubordinate infantrymen.

A serious conflict has occurred at Almada, on the left bank of the Tagus, opposite Lisbon, between Catholics and the striking cork cutters and lightermen. The strikers invaded a church, where they cheered for the republic and hooted the Catholics. The congregation fled in terror to the street and were pursued by the strikers. A fierce fight followed in which many on both sides were injured. Troops were called out and had difficulty in restoring order.

The strikes are causing the gravest injury to trade, especially to those in which lightermen and dockers were engaged. It is now announced that these strikes have been settled, but it is likely that some time will elapse before all the men return to work. Meantime many foreign ships have been forced to leave Lisbon without discharging their cargoes.

Business men show much indignation over the situation, for the cork cutters' strike is growing steadily worse. The strikers crowd the streets in groups, and hundreds of cavalrymen are patrolling day and night. There are frequent collisions, and many persons have been injured by the cavalry charges. Eight strikers have been arrested on the charge of burning a cork factory on the south bank of the Tagus.

Several additional Ministers have been selected for the new Cabinet. These include the holders of the portfolios of Marine, Public Works, Colonies, and Justice. The Cabinet as now formed is as follows: Premier and Minister of the Interior, Joao Chagas; Finance, Duarte Leito; War, Gen. Pimenta Castro; Marine, Dr. Joao Menezes; Foreign Affairs, Augusto Vasconcellos; Public Works, Sidonio Paes; Colonies, Celestino Alemeida; Justice, Senhor Leotte.

HILL RECALL NOT DUE TO POTASH DISPUTE

Retiring Ambassador to Berlin So Declares and Quotes Taft Letter to Prove It.

DECLINES KAISER'S ORDER

But Accepts Vase Like That Given to Roosevelt—Has Declined Presidency of an American University.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 3.—Having ceased to be American Ambassador to the Kaiser's Court yesterday, Dr. David Jayne Hill to-day broke silence for the first time regarding his mysterious resignation last April. In a statement issued for simultaneous publication in the United States and Germany the ex-Ambassador vigorously refutes the "legend," which he asserts was "carefully prepared and widely circulated," to the effect that his retirement was due to the American Government's dissatisfaction with his conduct of the potash negotiations in Berlin.

That Dr. Hill leaves Berlin high in the Kaiser's favor is evident from the fact that the Emperor yesterday tried to induce the ex-Ambassador to accept a high decoration. Dr. Hill declined the decoration on the ground that the law prevents an American official from accepting a foreign order, but consented to receive the gift of a magnificent porcelain vase from the royal potteries as a token of the Emperor's esteem. The vase bears a handsome portrait of the Kaiser, and is of the same kind as that which his Majesty presented to Col. Roosevelt in 1910.

Dr. Hill's statement leaves untouched the underlying reason of his retirement, but there is a veiled intimation that intrigues in certain high places at Washington were behind it. That President Taft himself had no part in these intrigues is indicated by an autograph letter which Dr. Hill quotes, in which the President categorically denies that any action of Dr. Hill in the potash dispute brought about the Ambassador's retirement, and expresses his unqualified approval of his entire diplomatic career in Germany.

Dr. Hill will leave Germany to-morrow, after taking a farewell luncheon with the Foreign Secretary, Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter. His plans for the future are undecided, but he is likely to devote himself primarily to literary work. The ex-Ambassador told the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES that he had been offered and had refused the Presidency of an American university, which he was careful to state was "not Princeton."

BERLIN, Sept. 3.—The text of Dr. Hill's statement is as follows:

"I cannot leave Germany without expressing appreciation of the kindness I experienced here, particularly from his Majesty, who generously intimated his wish to confer upon me an honor which the laws of my country forbid me to accept. I have, however, considered it proper to receive from his Majesty as a souvenir of our agreeable relations a piece of porcelain from the royal potteries, and I wish to make a public acknowledgment of this mark of friendship.

"At the time of my resignation in April there was much speculation regarding the reason therefor, and a legend concerning my course in the negotiations between my Government and Germany over the potash controversy was carefully prepared and widely circulated, positively declaring, on alleged authority, that my conduct was displeasnig to the Department of State. Under such circumstances, the duty of a loyal diplomat is silence, and faithfully I performed this duty.

"I have believed that the American people, careless as they often are of reputations, love fair play, and, knowing that the official record there would speak the truth at the proper time, I have taken no notice of either the source or the motive of these allegations. I have now no comment to make upon them.

"On leaving office, six months after my resignation, I believe that it will be a pleasure to the President if I make public at this time an autograph statement made by him some months ago, which should effectually silence and exterminate the legend which certain newspapers have endeavored to keep alive. He says:

> I write now to assure you that I never had the slightest reason to criticise your course and service at the very important post of Berlin. You have vindicated your appointment in every way, and it has given me pleasure to deny emphatically and categorically that your resignation grew out of any disagreement on the part of the Administration with your conduct in this country's relations with Germany in regard to the potash or any other question. * * * I write this to you for you are entitled to have a full statement as to your satisfactory service, written by him whom you have worthily and well represented at the great capital of Berlin.

"I make public this statement now for the purpose of assuring my friends in Europe and America of my fathful allegiance to the principles of loyalty by which I have been actuated throughout my official life, which has been of considerable duration, and to show appreciation of the sense of justice by which the President was inspired in recognizing the wrong done me by others, whose misrepresentations he has desired, as far as possible, to repair, in circumstances which I have reason to believe he at present entirely understands."

Ambassador Hill was not willing to indicate more closely the persons he believes were interested in discrediting him. The Ambassador and Mrs. Hill will leave Berlin to-morrow, after a luncheon which will be given in their honor by Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, to which Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor; Representative Richard Bartholdt and C. B. Wolffram, the Special Ambassadors of President Taft to the unveiling of the von Steuben Monument; Brig. Gen. E. A. Garlington, Inspector General of the United States Army, and Brig. Gen. William W. Wotherspoon, U. S. A., President of the Army War College, have been invited.

RESIGNATION MADE TALK.

Some Thought Dr. Hill's Post Was Wanted for Knox's Friend Leishman.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—Dr. Hill's statement regarding his resignation of the post of Ambassador to Germany is a sequel to stories set afloat upon the announcement of that resignation last Spring, and his own declaration later that neither the potash negotiations nor lack of wealth had anything to do with his retirement. The inference has been drawn that the post at Berlin was wanted for Ambassador Leishman, then at Rome, who stood next in rank for the place, and is a close personal friend of Secretary of State Knox. However that may be, Mr. Leishman was later appointed. Acting Secretary of State Wilson was in Baltimore to-night, and no word was obtainable from the department with regard to the incident.

When Dr. Hill was recalled to Washington last March he conferred with State Department officials regarding the then pending potash controversy with Germany, an acute and protracted issue. Almost immediately the correspondence between himself and President Taft, embodying Dr. Hill's resignation, to take effect during the Summer, was made public. Many conjectures were circulated as to the real reasons underlying the action. Delicate social questions involving American exchange professors and Court invitations, in which Dr. Hill had figured as Ambassador, were recalled. The delay in settling the potash controversy was referred to, also, but in a subsequent official statement Secretary of State Knox declared that Dr. Hill's handling of the potash situation was entirely satisfactory.

When Dr. Hill's appointment at Berlin was decided upon three and a half years ago, it was said that he was personally unacceptable to Emperor William, and that he had offended Prince Henry on the latter's visit to the United States in 1902, but these stories were quickly denied. The Kaiser announced he had no objection whatever to him. When Dr. Hill reached his post gossip again became active, but concerned chiefly the simplicity of the Hills' establishment abroad in contrast to those of some other American Ambassadors in Berlin. Since last Spring there has been a general shift in the Diplomatic Service.

POLICE QUIET FOOD RIOTERS.

Compromises with Shopkeepers Also Soothe French Housewives.

PARIS, Sept. 3.—General quiet prevailed to-day in the districts where the agitation against the high price of food has been most pronounced. The manifestants were either kept in check by the forces of gendarmes and soldiers or were engaged in negotiating with the storekeepers under the auspices of the Mayors, with the object of the lowering of prices and the suspension of disorder. In many instances the negotiations have been declared successful.

The Government is alive to the seriousness of a continuance of such a situation as prevailed last week, at a time when international negotiations of vast importance are occupying its attention. The Government, however, is trying its utmost to remove the causes of the local disturbances, and at the same time is using strong measures to counteract the regrettable effects, the more so as the principal agitators of the revolutionary general federation of labor are seizing the occasion to turn economic into political questions, and are fomenting general strikes among the mine workers and in the industries in which the majority of the people of the north are engaged.

The Government to-day dispatched M. Hennion, chief of the criminal investigation department, to watch affairs. Additional forces of cavalry have been sent to the affected districts, the authorities of which have received renewed instructions to put down disturbances at any cost.

A few isolated cases of violence were reported during the day, but the police generally had the upper hand.

President Fallières to-day left for Toulon, where he is to be present at a great naval review. The flower of the French Navy will take part in the review, which will be one of the most imposing naval ceremonies in recent years.

MAY FLOAT CERVERA'S SHIPS.

Engineers Believe It Possible to Save Three of the Fleet.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Sept. 3.—President Taft's recent message to Congress asking that it be determined whether the Spanish men-of-war sunk in the battle of Santiago thirteen years ago should be given away and Secretary Knox's opinion that the wrecks belong to the United States have revived speculation here as to the possible refloating of the ships.

Engineers who have studied the location of the three battleships and two torpedo boats are of the opinion that their salvage is practicable and would warrant the expense of saving the hulks.

Seven miles west of the narrow mouth to Sanitago Harbor lies the first of Cervera's bottled-up battleships, the Almirante Oquendo. Long ago she was stripped of every portable article by wreckers who braved a watery grave for the prizes she was reputed to have held. They took everything they could pry loose, including, report has it, many thousand golden coins from the ship's safe.

Admiral Cervera's flagship, the Vizcaya, lies eight miles further down the rocky coast, as much a victim to the depredations of ocean junkmen as the Oquendo. It is believed that there would be comparatively little difference in recovering her.

At Rio Torquino, forty-eight miles from this city, is the Christobal Colon, which has been preserved from the hand of the vandal by four fathoms of water above her. Locked in her safe there is said to be a large amount of money.

The Infanta Maria Teresa was floated by Lieut. Richmond P. Hobson of Merrimac fame, and lost in tow of an American war vessel on her way to an American port during a squall off Cat Island, in the West Indies. Engineers have decreed her beyond and unworthy of a second attempt at salvage.

The torpedo boats Furor and Pluton lie submerged not far from the harbor entrance. The safe of the Pluton and easily portable articles from her deck and cabins have been recovered. The Furor is practically undisturbed. Both lie in shallow water.

BERLIN ANTI-WAR PROTEST.

Socialists at Gathering of 200,000 Call Morocco Agitation Infamous.

BERLIN, Sept. 3.—The Kaiser and the Imperial Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, have gone to Kiel to review the naval parade. They will return to Berlin on Wednesday.

While Government officials are optimistic regarding the outcome of the negotiations between Foreign Secretary von Kiderlen-Waechter, and M. Cambon, the French Ambassador, over the Moroccan question, it is assumed that no conclusion will be reached before the return of the Emperor. The newspapers for the most part refrain from discussion to-day pending a decision in the matter, but one Hamburg paper demands the abandonment of the naval review and the transfer of every available ship to Wilhelmshaven ready to fight.

The Socialist Party leaders held an open meeting at Treptow Park this afternoon as a peace demonstration. About 200,000 persons attended. Speeches were made from ten platforms by prominent Socialist members of the Reichstag and others. A resolution was adopted strongly condemning "the infamous war agitation." The meeting passed off without disorder.

DENY POPE'S ILLNESS.

Stories of Renewed Indisposition Are Said to be Baseless.

ROME, Sept. 3.—Reports are again in circulation regarding the ill-health of the Pope, but there seems little reason for anxiety. The Pope is suffering from a very slight swelling of the left knee, but this has required no special treatment.

The Pontiff celebrated mass to-day, walked in the Vatican gardens, conversed with his sister and niece, and had a long conversation with Cardinal Ferrata. He showed no evidences of indisposition.

To Discuss Chinese Loans.

SHANGHAI, Sept. 3.—A. W. Bash, who represents an American syndicate, will leave here for San Francisco on the steamer Empress of India, sailing Sept. 5, and will proceed to New York for the purpose of discussing further Chinese loans.

SUDDEN DEATH OF J. H. DERR.

For Many Years Member of Consolidated Stock Exchange.

John H. Derr, head of the Wall Street brokerage house of John H. Derr of 68 Broad Street, died suddenly of heart trouble early yesterday at his home, 174 West Ninety-fifth Street. He was retiring for the night when the seizure came. Dr. Francis M. Banta of 160 West Ninety-fifth Street, a Fire Department physician, was called, but when he arrived the broker was dead.

Mr. Derr was born in Lebanon, Penn., Oct. 8, 1845. He was for many years a member of the Consolidated Stock Exchange. He leaves a widow.

CZAR'S COUSIN WEDS A SERVIAN PRINCESS

MANY ROYALTIES PRESENT

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 3.—The wedding of Prince John Constantinovitch, son of Grand Duke Constantine Constantinovitch, the Czar's cousin, and Princess Helena, daughter of King Peter of Servia, was celebrated to-day in the chapel of the palace at Peterhof. The ceremony except for minor details was carried out with full Grand Ducal splendor.

The beginning of the nuptials was announced at 10 o'clock in the morning by five guns from Peterhof and the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul. The guests, who assembled at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, included Premier Stolypin and the members of his Cabinet and other state dignitaries. They were stationed in the salons connecting the White Hall with the chapel, through which the procession passed.

The Dowager Empress Marie-Feodorovna was able to take part only in the ceremony of the robing of the bride, which occurred before the historic mirror, where all the brides of the imperial family have been robed since the day of Empress Anna Ivanovna. The bride wore an ancient Russian silver brocade and the historical veil of the Karageorgevitch family. She wore across her right shoulder the red ribbon with silver border of the Order of St. Catherine.

At the end of the robing the Emperor blessed the bridal pair, and a procession was formed, led by a gayly attired group of functionaries of the court. The Emperor escorted the Queen of Greece, followed by Grand Duke Alexis, heir to the Russian throne, and the Emperor's youngest daughter, King Peter of Servia with Grand Duchess Helène Vladimirovna, Prince Alexander, the Servian heir-apparent, with Grand Duchess Marie Pavlovna, Grand Duke Constantine Constantinovitch and the Grand Duchess, Prince Chakrabongs of Siam, Prince Nicholas of Greece and Prince Peter of Montenegro, with the three eldest daughters of the Emperor, respectively, and Prince Arthur of Connaught with the eldest daughter of the Grand Duke Constantine. Then came the bridal couple, and behind them the Grand Dukes and the guests from foreign Courts and their suites. The procession was interspersed with many young children.

The imperial party was received at the chapel doors by the Metropolitan, Vladimir of Moscow, and an array of priests and august personages. The members of the party were sprinkled with holy water and kissed the cross. The Emperor conducted the bridal couple to a dais before the altar gates. After prayers the wedding rings were brought from the altar on golden salvers and placed on the fingers of the bride and bridegroom by the Emperor's confessor.

At the conclusion of the nuptials Prince John and his bride thanked their Majesties and reascended the dais. The Metropolitan then officiated at a Te Deum, during which thirty-one guns were fired. The Emperor and King Peter then congratulated the newly married pair, and the procession returned to the palace.

PET DOG BIT EVERY ONE.

Its Master and Mistress, the Latest Victims, Opposed His Punishment.

Ruggie was a dog with exceptional privileges. He was a fox terrier, and he won his fame and subsequent privileges because he was smarter than other dogs and knew more tricks. Whenever he did snap at a little girl in his neighborhood, therefore, it was soon forgotten and forgiven. Like some little children who are naughty but pretty, Ruggie always triumphed.

This much-beloved fox terrier came into the household of Mr. and Mrs. John Bortell four years ago, when they lived with their two sons, Herman and Edward, in Union Hill, N. J. He was a pup then and had the privileges of the fields as well as the home.

About two years ago John Bortell became Superintendent of the Bellhaven apartment house, at 515 West 124th Street, and took Ruggie as well as the family to the city with him. The dog hated the apartment life from the start, and became surly. He snapped at little girls and boys, and there were many complaints about a little, yellow trick dog in that neighborhood.

Recently Ruggie got so nervous about his narrow confines that he began biting right and left. John Bortell's two sons proposed shooting the pet, but Mrs. Bortell would not hear of it, and Mr. Bortell was equally forgiving. The dog feared the sons, it seemed, and did not bite them often, but Mr. Bortell and his wife often went to their doctor and had their wounds cauterized. Then they tied them up and scolded Ruggie a little.

Ruggie was unusually "playful" last Friday, and before he was kicked from under the dinner table by the elder son he had left his teeth marks in both mother and father Bortell's right ankles. Herman, the elder son, was angry, but his mother and father pleaded with him and again Ruggie's life was saved.

These last wounds grew to be serious. Yesterday Mr. Bortell went with his wife to the J. Hood Wright Hospital, and Dr. Jacobs told them that serious consequences might be expected. He advised that the "playful" dog be immediately shot.

The family then had a stormy conference, and finally on a divided vote sentenced Ruggie to death. Policeman Prince was summoned from the West 125th Street Police Station, and after a scuffle took the dog a prisoner and locked him in a cell. There he was denied all privileges. His fate will be decided to-day by the Board of Health.

ASK MORE TO RUN CITY.

Board of City Record Only Department Needing Less Money Next Year.

Departmental estimates for 1912 are daily being received by the Board of Estimate, and the first department to show any noticeable decrease in its estimate for next year is the Board of City Record. This decrease can be traced as an obvious result of the rigid investigation last year, which showed much waste and extravagance. The new administration offers a saving of $55,300 for next year.

The Police Department asks for $17,863,414.22. This year the Department got $15,517,218.83. The increases are mostly for salaries. Commissioner Waldo has requested that his own salary be increased from $7,500 to $15,000. He also says that the department needs one thousand new patrolmen at $1,000 a year.

The estimate of the Board of City Magistrates, Manhattan, shows an increase of 35 per cent., or $75,100, over this year, $73,000 of which is for salaries. This includes eleven new clerks, twenty-nine assistant clerks, fourteen stenographers, eleven interpreters, and ten female probation officers.

The Less Lonely League Moves.

So many lonely New Yorkers have heard the call of the Less Lonely League to come and sing a song or speak a piece or play a violin at its Less Lonely evening affairs that the league has been forced to seek new and more centrally located headquarters. From 57 East 126th Street, where the league brought lonely folks together from all parts of Manhattan, the league has moved to 46 East Twenty-ninth Street, and on Tuesday evening its housewarming and general reception will occur. L. J. Wing, who was the lonely founder of the league, assures all who come that they will find recitations, music, singing, and fortune telling in plenty, so that there will be no excuse for remaining lonely after arriving. Not only members, but others who are lonely are invited. A dance will follow the fortune telling and musical events.

BIG TOPICS FOR GOVERNORS.

Serious Business of Annual Conference to Overshadow Social Functions.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., Sept. 3.—For the first time within recent American history the Governors of more than seven-ninths of the forty-six States will meet here in conference Tuesday, Sept. 12. Thirty-seven Chief Executives have accepted the call outright, several from near-by Commonwealths are yet to be heard from, and of the small remainder those who can so arrange their duties will attend for at least a part of the time. The original conference at the White House, held upon call of President Roosevelt in 1907, was attended by thirty-three conferrees.

The full five days of the programme will be devoted to discussion of questions now uppermost in the minds of statesmen, while social affairs will be kept in the background. Last year at Louisville a round of entertainment was provided which took so much time that the business of the conference was curtailed. When they adjourned to meet at Spring Lake the Governors told Gov. Wilson that they wanted to come this year for serious business, and would leave the social end to their wives and others who might accompany them. Accordingly Dr. Wilson and the committee have refused to allow any entertainments to be arranged, except a reception which the Governor and Mrs. Wilson will give at the State cottage at Sea Girt Sept. 12, and a dinner the following Thursday.

On the programme, which has already been announced, are topics of widespread interest. To the discussion of employers' liability and workingmen's compensation laws an entire day will be devoted, and State control of public utilities will be discussed for another full day. Gov. John A. Dix of New York will discuss the inheritance tax law passed last Winter. The question of fixing intra-State traffic rates will also be considered at a separate session. Gov. Herbert S. Hadley of Missouri will be a speaker on this subject.

Judson Harmon of Ohio will be present, and possibly President Taft for one day. Mr. Taft may address the gathering, but this has not yet been definitely arranged.

Governors of the Western States will leave Chicago on Sunday night, Sept. 10, on a special car, which will reach Spring Lake Monday afternoon. Townspeople of Spring Lake are planning a big celebration for that night by way of welcome.

MACK STILL DEMANDS PLUM.

Not Satisfied to Let New York City Have Six New Congressmen.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Sept. 3.—Norman E. Mack, Democratic National Chairman, stopped off in Albany to-night on his return to Buffalo from New York, where he had gone in the interest of an additional Congressman for Erie County under the new apportionment.

Mr. Mack does not like the idea of New York City taking all of the six additional Congressmen, which he found was the way the Apportionment bill under preparation by Senator Wagner was being drawn. Mr. Mack believes that Erie County is justly entitled to one of the new districts.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—Frank Gotch, the Iowa farmer, and George Hackenschmidt, the Russian student, will determine to-morrow who is the mightiest wrestler in the world. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in the American League baseball park here, these two mighty wrestlers will take to the mat to settle the supremacy.

Gotch won their former match in Chicago April 3, 1908, but he did not pin the shoulders of the "Russian Lion" to the mat. For that reason he has never received universal credit for his victory. But to-morrow, both contestants insist, the match will not end until one man has obtained two falls. It may be necessary to finish the contest under the glare of arc lights. Regardless of this, the wrestlers are determined to settle their dispute beyond all possible doubt before they leave the park.

With the contest less than twenty-four hours away, there is great interest to-night in the match. From all parts of the country followers of the sport are coming in, and all the downtown hotels are crowded.

Throughout the day the ticket office was busy disposing of coupons. The total sales up to 6 o'clock to-night amounted to approximately $70,000. It is expected that at least 25,000 persons will attend the contest, and that the gross receipts will be in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Whatever they are, it is certain they will be larger than any ever taken in at any previous wrestling contest.

Statements of the Wrestlers.

"I certainly expect to win, for I am basing my plans for victory on my condition, which is better than ever before in my long wrestling career. I also believe that I will be able to meet Hackensmidt trick for trick, and outlast him if the match becomes an endurance contest, such as our former match.

"Just how I will try to defeat 'Hack' I cannot say. My tactics will depend somewhat on his. I am prepared to wrestle all night if necessary. Hack's great strength makes him a hard man to defeat. It will be a match in which generalship as well as strength will count. My greater experience will bring me victory."—Gotch.

"In all of my professional wrestling matches I never have tried to predict the outcome. I will not boast. All I can say is that I am feeling fine, and have trained faithfully, and I want to sail for home Sept. 9 as the world's wrestling champion.

"I never have been satisfied with my other match with Gotch when he was credited with defeating me. I have learned more since then, and have more confidence."—Hackenschmidt.

Although the turnstiles at the park will not begin to revolve until 11 o'clock to-morrow, early to-night ardent devotees of the sport had begun to gather outside the grounds and seek vantage points for an early entrance to the field. Many of them were already provided with tickets, but they did not desire to be caught in the crush that will ensue a few hours before the candidates enter the arena.

Stories of Gotch's wonderful condition which have been circulated since he arrived here last Friday have forced the betting odds on him down to 2 to 1. While he was still training in Humboldt, Ia., he was but a 6 to 5 favorite. But his work here has caused his stock to rise rapidly.

Little Betting on the Match.

Very little betting is being done, however. As an explanation for this condition veteran sports say that the element which used to plunge on big contests of all kinds has not forgotten the memorable prize fight which took place in Reno on July 4, 1910. The so-called "talent" plunged and lost on that occasion, and, although this match in no way resembles that one, big bettors, having once been bitten, are still timid.

Gotch partisans maintain that he will win because he is the cleverer catch-as-catch-can wrestler, a quicker thinker, and perhaps as strong as his opponent. They insist that he displayed his superiority in every department of the sport in their last match, and that in the last three years he has improved greatly.

On the other hand, followers of Hackenschmidt say that he is the strongest wrestler that has ever lived, and in this contest, which it is generally conceded will be one requiring great endurance, he will outlast his opponent. Hackenschmidt has devoted the greater part of his training for this contest toward making himself faster. Dr. B. F. Roller, a scientific wrestler and an old running mate of Gotch, has been the Russian's chief trainer.

Chief Trainer Americus, another speedy grappler, has also been in the camp. Both assert that Hackenschmidt has greatly increased his speed and that Gotch will not have a single trick which will baffle their charge.

Both men say they are fit. To all outward appearances they are. But when this phase of the match is under discussion old-timers, who have been at the ringside or matside at every important match in the last decade, again refer to the Jeffries-Johnson contest, pointing out that the greatest experts thought the alfalfa farmer was in shape. Somehow, the sporting element cannot forget that Reno battle.

There were no signs of worry on the champion's face to-day. He beamed over with smiles in responding to the cheers of the baseball throng and laughed boyishly when the crowd shouted, "You'll trim Hack sure to-morrow, Frank."

This was a trying day for Hackenschmidt's trainers. The giant wrestler was as petulant as a spoiled child. Dr. Roller says this is a good sign, because it shows the man is on edge.

The Russian took a short run in the morning, slept a couple of hours during the afternoon, and wrestled with Dr. Roller, Americus, and John Koch just before dinner.

Hackenschmidt was to have umpired a baseball game to-day, but his trainers canceled his engagement, explaining he was too nervous to officiate. His wrestling bouts to-day were strenuous.

Bohemia's Champion Wrestler Here.

That old beacon by which all foreign wrestlers steer—Johnny Dunn—has another "latest importation." Johnny was going across Battery Park the other morning humming Lillian Russell's old song, "The Land I Love is Bohemia," when Josef Smeykal, who was taking his first squint at the tallest buildings in the world, heard him. He only heard one word of the ditty—Bohemia—and straightaway he hooked on to Johnny. Smeykal comes from Bohemia, and he is here to get a crack at the winner of to-day's championship match in Chicago. Smeykal holds the belt emblematic of the championship of his country, presented by the ruler of Bohemia.

ACCIDENTS MAR RACE.

Driver Frayer Badly Injured When Tire Bursts—New Auto Record.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 3.—A driver and a mechanician slightly injured, two cars wrecked, and a world's record made for the fastest contest mile on a dirt track by Harry Knight of Indianapolis, driving a Westcott machine, winning in 3 hours and 45 minutes, tell the story of the 200-mile automobile sweepstakes race to-day. The races took place at the Driving Park under the sanction of the American Automobile Association.

The injured were Lee Frayer, driver of the Red Wing, Firestone Columbus car, and Ben Lawwell of Columbus, substitute mechanician on a Buick, driven at the time of the accident by John Ramey of Cincinnati, whose machine early in the race went out of commission. Both men are in hospitals, but will recover. Knight, winner of the race, was the only driver completing the 200 miles who remained in his machine throughout the long and gruelling contest.

As Frayer was entering his eighty-sixth mile, speeding little short of a mile a minute, the right rear tire on his machine blew up. His machine skidded seventy-five feet and was hurled into a row of fence posts. The machine turned two somersaults sideways and landed right side up.

The Buick accident occurred in the same spot. Ramey relieved Frank Lawwell, and was entering his one hundred and ninety-second lap in second place after the Westcott machine had finished the race. Pressed hard by Jackson Car 2, driven by Max Borst, Columbus, Ramey took the turn at the south end of the course at full speed. The right front tire exploded, and the machine skidded into the embankment.

The force of the impact landed Mechanician Lawwell among the broken fence posts, and he was taken up, almost unconscious. Ramey stuck to his machine, which after tearing down several posts crossed the track and ran into the fence on the inside of the course. Beyond a severe shaking up he was uninjured. The machine was badly damaged.

LARNED'S CHANCES EVEN.

Tennis Champion in Crucial Test When He Plays McLoughlin To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 3.—While Maurice E. McLoughlin, the Californian and challenger for the National championship, and William A. Larned, the defending holder, put the finishing touches on their games to-day, the experts discussed the probable outcome of the great match which will bring the thirty-first All-Comers' Tournament to an end on the Casino courts to-morrow. Gradually the proposition worked down to even money betting, although there seemed to be slightly more Larned supporters than those who favored the challenger's chances.

"The facts of Larned's career must be taken into consideration," said one of the experts. "Larned is playing against a wonderful youth who is twenty years his junior, and who is one of the most phenomenal net players that this country has ever known. Then McLoughlin is confident, and he is at the top of his game. The old champion is in for a real trial, and he knows it. His recent practice against his brother, Erwin P. Larned, Richard Stevens, and others has not been satisfactory.

"It must be remembered that Larned never won the championship standing in the position of challenger. He first got it in 1901 by the default of Malcolm D. Whitman. The next year he defended successfully against R. F. Doherty. In 1903 he was defeated by H. L. Doherty. Then Holcombe Ward, Beals C. Wright, and William J. Clothier followed as holders of the title. In 1907, Larned came through the tournament, defeating Robert Le Roy in the final, and again took the honors by the default of Clothier, who had met with an injury during that Winter. Since that time Larned has defended, and he may again be successful."

The fact that the court will be in much better condition than it was yesterday when McLoughlin disposed of Beals C. Wright so easily, is regarded as favoring McLoughlin. The entire question of supremacy, in the estimation of the experts, depends upon the Californian's steadiness and whether or not Larned can pass his challenger as the latter comes up to the net.

The fact became known here to-day that there is likely to be some close scrutiny as to the amateur status of some of the leading players during the Winter season. It was said that A. L. Hoskins, Secretary of the National Association, had been making careful inquiry as to reports of some of the players being engaged by sporting goods manufacturers, while others were doing a side-line busines selling racquets and lawn tennis equipment.

There is also likely to be some movement before another year rolls around toward shortening the tournament to one week of play. It was pointed out that in this year's All-Comers there had been 153 matches played and 48 defaulted. For the twelve days which the tournament has held the courts here, including the rainy days, the average is only thirteen matches per day.

FAST TENNIS TOURNEY.

New Rochelle Tennis Club Contestants Reach the Fifth Round.

In the continuation of the New Rochelle Tennis Club open tournament yesterday on the Quaker Ridge courts all previous records were broken in the way of elimination as two of the players reached the fifth round, which is the round before the semi-final. Only six more players are due to arrive at the same position, and for a draw of seventy-seven in the men's singles it was rapid going for two days' play. The players to move so swiftly toward the leg on the Quaker Ridge Cup are M. Galvao of the New York Lawn Tennis Club, in the upper section, and Abraham Bassford, Jr., of the home club, in the lower section.

Benjamin M. Phillips, holder of the Quaker Ridge title, won his way to the fourth round. His rival in the third round was Richard P. Bennett, who gave the holder a stiff three-set tussle. The summaries:

Wrestling Bouts To-day.

Reports of the championship wrestling match between Frank Gotch and George Hackenschmidt at Chicago will be received by special wire at the Twentieth Century A. C. this afternoon and announced during the progress of several wrestling bouts to be staged there. The doors will be opened at 2:15 o'clock, and the programme will begin one hour later. To-night a boxing and wrestling show will be staged by the same club, the winners of the afternoon matches coming together in the evening. Among those announced by the club for the double show are Leo Pardello, Niel Olson, Young Monday, Kid Sharkey, Alexander Maggis, George Sandale, John McLaughlin, Lex Bersin, Ignats Jaranowski, Young Muldoon, Frank Becker, Gaston Gjommes, and Will Bingham.

Where the Fish Are Biting.

For Labor Day anglers there are in the local waters, say, from Seabright to Long Beach, kingfish, plaice (or fluke,) Spanish mackerel, striped bass, the drums, red and black; blackfish, croker, snapper, sheepshead, porgies, sea bass, bluefish, weakfish, eel, and the humble crustacean, the crab. The abundant fish are sea bass, fluke, and porgies. The best of them all, of course, is the humpback sea bass, which can now be taken at Seabright, Seventeen Fathoms, off Long Beach, Cholera Banks, and other well-known fishing grounds.

In Prince's Bay, Jamaica Bay, and Great South Bay may now be found the fullgrown weakfish, which anglers term the yellow fin, because of their bright, yellow color. Bluefish in great numbers are in Great South Bay, particularly in Fire Island Inlet.

Striped bass are taken along the northern shores of New Jersey and at Long Beach and Montauk Point on the Long Island coast. At Montauk the big striped bass are hooked. Kingfish are numerous, and the first of the Fall blackfish are taking the bait.

CHICAGO BREAKS EVEN WITH ST. LOUIS

Cubs Drop Two Points Further Behind Giants in Race.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—The Cubs received another setback in their pennant chase this afternoon by dropping the first game of a doubleheader to the Cardinals, 3 to 2. Chance's men came back strongly enough in the second engagement to gain the verdict, 4 to 2, but to-night's standing shows them two points farther away from the Giants than they were this morning. The defeat was a bitter disappointment to a crowd of 25,000 enthusiastic Cub followers who packed the west side park in anticipation of a double triumph, which would push the Cubs so much nearer to their resting rivals.

To Bill Steele's stellar work on the mound the Cubs can lay the blame of their costly defeat in the first game. The big fellow was practically invincible in all save the eighth inning when a combination of hits and passes pushed two Chicago runs across the plate. Steele was reached for five hits, but his control was a bit off, and he gave five passes besides hitting a batsman. When danger loomed up in the shape of possible Cub tallies he was at his best, however, and seven of the home team were stranded on the paths. King Cole also pitched a strong game, but hits were bunched in two innings for the runs which decided the game. Huggins's fielding was a feature.

In the second game Lew Richie had the Cardinals eating from his hand most of the way. Laudermilk was far from a puzzle, and his wildness helped the Cubs materially in collecting their four runs. The scores:

Two Games at Lenox Oval.

Two games will be played this afternoon at Lenox Oval, 145th Street and Lenox Avenue. In the first game the Winonas will oppose the Harlems. The second game will bring out the Mets and All-Stars of Newark. Dummy Deegan will pitch for the All-Stars. The Mets will have a big league pitcher. All the National and American League scores will be posted so that the crowd can keep posted on the doings of the Giants.

Kramer Stays in Front.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 3.—Frank Kramer, the National bicycle champion, added to his score in this season's fight for the National championship to-day by a victory in the five-mile National championship event on the Veledrome track here. Alfred Goulett of Australia finished second to Kramer, with Patrick Hehir, Australia, third and Joe Fogler of Brooklyn, fourth. Kramer's time was 9:56 1-5. Results in other events were:

One-Mile Match.—Won by Jackie Clark, Australia; second, Kramer. Time—1:54 2-5. Paced by tandem.

One-Half Mile Handicap, Professional.—Won by Goulett, (scratch;) second, Peddler Palmer, Australia, (50 yards;) third, Charles Stein, Brooklyn, (40 yards.) Time—0:55.

Two-Mile Invitation, Professional.—Won by Menus Bedell, Newark; second, Peter Drobach, Boston; third, Percy Lawrence, San Francisco. Time—4:11.

I. A. A. C. Sports at Celtic Park.

Track and field followers will have many things to enthuse over this afternoon at the sports of the Irish-American Athletic Club in Celtic Park, for which the cream of the athletic world has entered. The entire National championship team of the Winged Fist organization has received a special preparation for these games, many of the events of which are of a scratch nature.

That there will be something doing in the record-breaking line seems assured in several of the races. The one-mile relay mark of 3:20 3-5, made a couple of years ago by a quartet of Irish-American lads, will be attacked by a sterling four to be chosen from Sheppard, Rosenberger, Gissing, who recently joined the club, and Pepis or Schaaf.

Gould's Horse Wins at Chantilly.

PARIS, Sept. 3.—At the Chantilly track to-day Frank J. Gould's Conti La Belle won the Prix d'Escoville, a ten and one-half furlong race for a stake of $1,000. W. K. Vanderbilt's Sightly finished second in the Prix de la Nonette, a two-year-old event for fillies at five and one-half furlongs.

Cleveland Wins Double-Header from the White Sox.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—Cleveland made it four straight from Chicago to-day, when steady pitching and timely batting gave the visitors two games. Mitchell and Blanding won the first contest, 7 to 2, a rally in the twelfth inning netting five hits and five runs off Walsh, who relieved Scott after the ninth. In the second game Kaler was invincible after the first inning and won handily, 3 to 1. Birmingham's batting featured the first game. The scores:

GIRL SWIMMER MAKES NEW RECORD

Miss Trapp, Brooklyn School Teacher, Covers 22½ Miles in 5:06:30.

Miss Adeline Trapp, a twenty-year-old Brooklyn school teacher, residing at 143 Havemeyer Street, Brooklyn, established a new swimming record for distance in local waters yesterday by covering the course from North Beach to Robbin's Reef, near Livingston, S. I. The straightest possible water line between the two points shows a distance of twenty and one-quarter miles, but a conservative estimate of the course covered by Miss Trapp in her various changes to escape cross-currents and get the benefit of favorable tides would make her swim twenty-two and one-half miles long. She was in the water 5 hours 6 minutes 30 seconds.

Miss Trapp's performance was the best ever shown in local waters, and the second best by any American swimmer. It is one-half mile longer than the recent swim of Charles Durborow from the Battery to Sandy Hook, the best previous performance locally, but twelve miles below Durborow's record-making swim last year in the Delaware River. The feat also takes from Miss Rose Pitonof the honor of being the woman long-distance swimming champion, a title which she won a few weeks ago in her swim of twenty-one miles from East Twenty-fourth Street to Coney Island. For three-fourths of the distance yesterday the little school teacher was favored by a strong flowing ebb tide. She dived into the water at 7:08:30 yesterday morning, and left the water at 12:15 o'clock.

There was more glory attached to the performance than that of eclipsing any previous swim in local waters. Miss Trapp in making this difficult swim did something which four of the strongest swimmers of the United States Volunteer Life Saving Corps were unable to do under the same conditions. Yesterday's swim was held under the auspices of the corps, to test the endurance of four men swimmers and Miss Trapp, who is affiliated with the Woman's National Volunteer Life Saving Corps, a branch of the other organization. All five started at the same signal, swam along the same course until forced to withdraw, and Miss Trapp was the only one to finish. The men who attempted the swim were William Shott of the Fort Washington Point Corps, William Halin of the East Sixty-fourth Street Station, Fred Ziegler and Peter Nelson of the East Fifty-eighth Street Station.

Three of the men—Nelson, Halin, and Ziegler—were taken into the launch just after reaching the Battery. Shott went on for several miles, but was finally forced to give up at a point about a mile from St. George, S. I., and almost a mile from where Miss Trapp finished. He covered about twenty-one and one-half miles, or one-half mile less than Durborow.

At no time during the long swim was Miss Trapp in any way fatigued, and at the conclusion of her record performance she seemed as strong as if she had made only an ordinary swim. Her eyes were affected considerably by the salt water and were bloodshot at the finish, but she showed no other ill-effects. Miss Trapp took no nourishment during her journey through the water, and at the conclusion she asked for some ice cream and chocolate. She was given a quart brick of ice cream and four pieces of chocolate candy, which she immediately ate while sitting on the pier where she completed the swim. Four hours before starting Miss Trapp ate three raw eggs and drank a cup of cold milk.

From the starting point to the Battery the swimmers enjoyed the full benefits of a strong ebb tide, but there was no drifting by any of them, all keeping up a steady stroke. It was feared at the start that Miss Trapp would not be able to go the full route, and those who followed her in the launch urged her frequently to float and conserve her strength. But she simply laughed at their fears and kept up a steady breast stroke all the way. She can use the trudgeon stroke, but figured it would be too fatiguing, and employed the same breast stroke throughout the long swim.

All the swimmers followed the course of the westerly boat channel used by boats coming down from the Sound. At Hell Gate the undertows caused them considerable trouble, especially Miss Trapp, who was whirled around several times without being able to fight her way clear of the undercurrents. After passing this dangerous point the swimming was easy and progress was swift until the Battery was reached. Between the Battery and Governors Island the heavy wash from the river craft and the cross currents bothered the swimmers considerably and forced three to withdraw. Halin gave up first, and Nelson and Ziegler followed soon after.

The five dived into the water at 7:08:30 off Veneer Dock, about one-half mile from Sanford's Point, North Beach. Each swimmer was accompanied by a trainer and a guide in a rowboat, and a large launch bearing members of the United States Volunteer Life Savers' Hospital Corps, in charge of Commodore Longfellow, followed the swimmers. Halin, who figured last week in the swim from the Battery to Coney Island, got away with a powerful stroke and soon led the field. He held the position until he withdrew from the contest just after passing the Battery. Halin passed Sunken Meadows at 7:40, and the others were closely bunched at the entrance to Flushing Bay. At 8:03 Halin was at Ninety-second Street, Miss Trapp passed Ward's Island at 8:03, and was at that time 100 yards behind Shott and Ziegler, who were thirty yards behind Nelson. When Blackwell's Island was neared by the back markers some railroad floats and river boats got in the way of the swimmers and they had to change their course. They turned toward the Long Island shore and then swung back to the westerly boat channel.

Halin passed under the Queensboro Bridge at 8.25, and was followed four minutes later by Nelson. Shott and Ziegler went under at 8:31, and Miss Trapp at 8:35. At 8:40 Halin passed Man-o'-War's Light. Nelson was passed by Shott and Ziegler opposite the Bellevue Hospital pier, and by Miss Trapp just before the Williamsburg Bridge was reached. Halin went under the Williamsburg Bridge at 9:12, Ziegler and Shott at 9:30, and Miss Trapp at 9:35.

Manhattan Bridge was reached by Halin at 9:40, passing Brooklyn Bridge a few minutes later, and he continued on to the Battery. He left the water at 9:50. The others passed the Battery and headed for Governors Island. Nelson was taken into the launch off the east shore of Governors Island at 10:15, and Ziegler followed a few seconds later. Miss Trapp and Shott continued the swim, and passed Castle Williams at 10:35. They headed for the Statue of Liberty with the tide strong against them. Shott reached a point directly opposite the statue at 11:13, and Miss Trapp reached the same point at 11:14. At 11:49 Shott was taken into the launch, and Miss Trapp continued her swim, in her endeavor to reach Robbins Reef, a point which she had decided as her goal after passing the statue. She reached the mark and ended her record-making swim at 12:15 o'clock, none the worse for her long swim barring a little eye trouble from the salt water.

Percy Platt a Winner.

In the final round of the tournament open to amateur golfers of the greater city at Van Cortlandt Park yesterday, Percy Platt, unattached, defeated J. M. Clarke of Amherst, by 3 up and 1 to play. From the moment Platt won the second hole in 3, there never was a stage in the contest where he did not have command of the situation, though his lead going out was not large.

Always driven, Clarke found himself at a disadvantage after nearly every tee shot, but even so the other's extra length would not have made much difference had the Amherst student been steadier on his short approaches. There were also times when Clarke putted raggedly, while on other occasions he brought off good ones.

An idea of Platt's spectacular long game may be gathered when it is stated that he drove the second green, a matter of 267 yards. The ball came to rest about eight feet from the pin, but he missed the try for a 2. Again, at the sixteenth, which is 465 yards, Platt reached the edge of the green on his second shot.

Out in 39, Platt turned for home 2 up, and when he won the next two holes in 4s, the match seemed as good as over. That was the way the match stood at the thirteenth, and then Clarke surprised the gallery by negotiating half stymies on the fourteenth and fifteenth greens, thereby winning both holes. They halved the sixteenth, but Platt won the next and the match.

SWIM DEAD HEAT.

Nerich and Goodwin Tied in Half-Mile Race in Jamaica Bay.

Jamaica Bay in the vicinity of Holland Station presented a gala appearance yesterday on the occasion of the annual water sports of the Jamaica Bay Yacht Club, which attracted some of the most expert swimmers in the metropolitan district. Along with the wealth of competitive material was a gallery composed of hundreds of both sexes, whose enthusiasm proved that they thoroughly enjoyed every phase of the entertainment provided.

One of the features of the series was a 200-yard invitation, which called out "Nick" Nerich, the metropolitan champion, and "Bud" Goodwin, the National title holder, both at the half-mile distance. Although Nerich got a little the better of the contest during the first 100 yards, Bud came through in the latter portion, catching his man at the final fifty yards, and holding him to the end, making a dead heat of the event. The time was very fast, being 2:41 2-5.

Joe Ruddy, New York Athletic Club, showed to advantage in the harlequin and obstacle races, winning both in somewhat handy fashion. In the first event the chief condition was to swim fifty yards to a float, don a woman's bathing suit, and swim back to the start. In the obstacle race Ruddy made his way over the various handicaps so much easier than the majority of his opponents that he had finished before the second man had made his turn for home.

E. Kratt, another Winged Foot wearer, was the best of those who engaged in the handicap "hundred," and made the best of use of the twenty-four seconds allotted him, winning somewhat easily from E. Steelberger of the New York Swimming Association, who was in receipt of sixteen seconds. Clarence Asch, New York Athletic Club, from the post of honor, managed to land in third place. The time was 1:11 2-5.

Rockaway swimmers furnished the first two men in the 100-yard novice, when E. Smyth and C. J. Quinn won the places for previous non-winners, with E. J. Jones, an unattached athlete, in third position, with the winner's time 1:15 4-5. The crowd managed to get a world of enjoyment out of the water polo match, which was contested by the New York Athletic Club team and an outfit tabbed the All-Stars, with the victory finally going to the Winged Foot aggregation by a score of 3 goals to 0. Joe Ruddy accounted for two of the tallies, and Hanredi the other. The summary:

100-Yard Swim, Handicap.—Won by E. Kratt, New York A. C., 24 seconds;) E. Steelberger, New York Swimming Association, (16 seconds,) second; Clarence Asch, New York A. C., (scratch,) third. Time—1:11 2-5.

200-Yard Swim, Scratch, Invitation.—Dead heat between N. F. Nerich, New York A. C., and Bud Goodwin, New York A. C. Time—2:41 2-5.

Harlequin Race.—Won by J. A. Ruddy, New York A. C.; J. J. Curran, City A. C., second; W. King, New York A. C., third. Time—1:48.

100-Yard Swim, Novice.—Won by E. Smyth, Rockaway Beach Swimming Club; C. J. Quinn, Rockaway Beach Swimmng Club, second; E. J. Jones, unattached, third. Time—1:15 4-5.

LANGFORD VS. JEANNETTE.

Colored Heavyweights Furnish Feature Bout of This Week's Programme.

The two near champions of the heavyweight class—Sam Langford of Boston and Joe Jeannette of Hoboken—furnish the big card of the present week's boxing programme in New York. Langford and Jeannette are generally conceded to rank second and third respectively on the pugilistic ladder, and the bout is the biggest heavyweight contest to be staged in the city since Horton law days. They will clash at Madison Square Garden Tuesday night under the auspices of the Madison Square Athletic Club, which handled the Wells-Brown bout last week, and interest among the fight fans has been sufficiently aroused to assure another great crowd.

Langford and Jeannette have come together several times during the past few years, and every bout was marked by action of the kind which pleases the cranks. Neither has yet succeeded in putting over the sleep punch on his opponent, but they have handed out considerable punishment to each other in every bout. A few years ago Jeannette's cleverness carried him safely through his bouts, but the more recent contests have shown Langford to better advantage than his New Jersey rival. At the present time the Boston Tar Baby seems to be going at his best clip, and in his recent bouts here he has had no difficulty with the men who stacked up against him. On the other hand Jeannette has not shown up to the form expected, and Langford rules favorite for the coming bout. Jeannette, however, can stand a great amount of punishment and can be expected to furnish Sam with much trouble.

Jeannette has been training at Jimmy De Forest's camp at Allenhurst, N. J., with Carl Morris as one of his sparring partners. Langford completed his training at Staten Island. The club had to hang up a big purse to secure this bout, as foreign promoters were unusually active to get the pair together. In an announcement sent out last night the club gave out an assurance that everything would be in readiness to take care of a large crowd, and no disorder, such as marked last week's bout, may be expected.

Next in importance to the Langford-Jeannette bout is the lightweight contest between Tommy Murphy and Pal Moore at the National Sporting Club Thursday night. This will be the first bout staged by Manager O'Rourke under the new law, having been put over from last week. Murphy and Moore clashed last Winter at the Madison A. C. and Murphy gained a clean-cut victory over the Quaker City boy. On that occasion Murphy was going at his best and Moore put up the poorest bout he has yet showed in New York. Since that time Moore has been after a return match with Tommy, and hopes to gain a victory and then go after Knockout Brown. Murphy is also after another match with his recent conqueror.

Heavyweights will almost fill the card at the Fairmont A. C. Wednesday night. In the main event Porky Flynn of Boston will clash with Jim Smith of Westchester over the ten-round route. Smith's recent setback at the hands of Langford does not bother him any, and he is confident of regaining some of his lost prestige by defeating Flynn. The latter, who is training at New Dorp with Langford, expects to have little difficulty outpointing the Westchester farmer. In the preliminaries Sailor White will oppose Jack McFarland and Jack Smith will take on Kid Elle, all being heavyweights. Both bouts are scheduled to go ten rounds.

The Olympic, Sharkey, and Long Acre Clubs have received their licenses from the Boxing Commission and all will stage bouts under the new law this week. The Olympic A. C. will conduct its show to-night, the Long Acre will hold forth Wednesday, and the Sharkey on Saturday. The Twentieth Century A. C. will stage some bouts to-night. The Brighton Beach A. C. of Coney Island will hold its regular weekly show Friday night, and the Brown's Gymnasium A. A. will be open as usual to-morrow night.

FOUR-BALL MATCH A TIE.

Hilton and Herreshoff and Travis and Kirkby in All Square Contest.

Golf at its best marked a four-ball match over the links of the Apawamis Club yesterday. The star performers were Harold H. Hilton, amateur champion of Great Britain, and Fred Herreshoff on one side against Walter J. Travis and Oswald Kirkby. They struggled all day over the thirty-six-hole route, and at the end of the match stood all square. So keen was the interest in this affair that a gallery of probably a thousand people attended.

In the early hours Kirkby carried off the honors, going out in 37 and home in 36 for a 73. During that period Hilton came the nearest to holding the Englewood crack. The Briton got around in 75, and, with a little more steadiness on the greens, might easily have saved two or three strokes. Travis was not at his best, taking 79, while Herreshoff, due to unsteady driving, made the circuit in 80. As it was, Travis and his partner ended the morning round 3 up.

After luncheon the conditions were reversed, Herreshoff doing the bulk of the work for his side. Hilton was also there most of the time, and it was his fine 4 at the 600-yard ninth hole that squared the match. The last six holes were halved, though Herreshoff threw away chances to win the match by missing puts on the fifteenth and home greens. He made the round in 73, Hilton taking 76, Kirkby 77, and Travis 80. Both sides had best-ball totals of 146. The individual cards include approximations, as usual. All did themselves credit except Travis, who played with less snap than usual. Hilton tried playing without a coat, as he said it bothered him somewhat.

Brooklyn Soccer Team Wins.

Brooklyn's soccer eleven traveled to Harrison, N. J., yesterday afternoon for the first game of the season, and their efforts were rewarded with a victory by a score of 5 goals to 3 in a nip-and-tuck battle. The West Hudsons started off in grand fashion and penetrated the visitors' net twice in the first ten minutes of play. The Brooklyn forward line then showed remarkable combination work, and before the half closed they held the lead by 3 goals to 2, MacKenzie, McConville, and Owens being the men to turn the trick. Halliwell perfomed well in goal for the visitors, and he repelled the severe charges made upon him in superb manner. In the second period Brooklyn tallied twice again, McConville and MacKenzie finding the home teams' goal on long shots. Clarke at centre half for the West Hudsons tallied the last goal of the game a few minutes before the call of time. Pringle and Gillette played well for the winners, while McKay and Hatge showed to advantage for the West Hudsons.

At Marquette Oval, Brooklyn, yesterday the Clan McDonald defeated the Columbia Oval eleven. Although the contest was one-sided the spectators were all glad to see their favorites in action again. The Clans won by a score of 8 goals to 2 after holding a 5-to-0 lead at the end of the first half.

At Van Cortlandt Park the Washington Football Club took the Britannia eleven into camp by the score of 2 goals to 1 in a fast game. At half time the losers were leading with 1 goal to 0, but in the second session of play the Washington team tied the score, and then won out amid great excitement.

With a record of fourteen straight victories the Camerons emerged champions in the Van Cortlandt Park Cricket League series. Yesterday they defeated the Anglo-American C. C. by the overwhelming margin of 109 runs. C. Pickford, 38; R. Slater, 29, and G. Goodman, 24, did the brunt of the batting for the winners.

Labor Day is a misnomer—'cause nobody labors.
We're closed all day—back to-morrow with everything men and boys wear.

MR. TAFT'S JOURNEYINGS.

The President is reported to be hard at work on the preparation of the scores of speeches he will deliver in the far journeyings of this Autumn. His special concern at present is said to be the need of giving patches of local color to his addresses suited to the many and various audiences he will meet. That was a favorite device of Mr. TAFT's immediate predecessor, but his success was not great in it. His keen self-consciousness tended to limit him to personal reminiscences or to references to ancestral connections, and these in the long run become monotonous. Mr. TAFT will run no such risk. But he has troubles of his own.

They are troubles of his own making, too. He will certainly find, wherever he goes, a great deal of interest and anxiety as to the increased cost of living, with a strong feeling that this increased cost is, to a great degree, due to the high taxes imposed by the tariff upon the necessaries of life. He has deemed it his duty to veto measures calculated to reduce some of the worst of these taxes. The only explanation he has so far submitted of this action is his belief that needed reductions can be made more wisely after his Tariff Board has reported. That is not an explanation that will readily be accepted in most parts of the country. Especially it will not be accepted as to the well-considered bill for the reduction of taxes on wool and woolens. Had he accepted this bill and vetoed the others, he would be in a better situation. Had he accepted the Wool bill, probably no others would have been sent to him by Congress. In any case he would have avoided the vexatious complication he is now involved in. He would not have had to present himself as an advocate of serious tariff reduction who had killed the best measure passed in a score of years.

It must be remembered that Mr. TAFT is distinctly pledged to reduction. What that reduction shall be he seems to have left to the Tariff Board. And to that board he seems to have given instructions which it will have a lot of trouble in carrying out, and which are, in a serious sense, merely partisan. The board is to report on what reductions can be made that will leave the taxes equal to the difference between cost abroad and cost at home. We have repeatedly shown that this is practically a hopeless task. But, suppose that it were practicable, what authority is there for the adoption of such a principle of tariff legislation? Really it is solely in the mind of Mr. TAFT. He will claim, naturally, that it was accepted by virtue of the result of the elections of 1908. But that claim is untenable, because, on that line of reasoning, it was distinctly rejected in the elections of 1910. The mandate given in those elections to an overwhelming majority in the popular branch of the Congress was to reduce the tariff in such way as to lighten the burden of the cost of living. This that majority proceeded to do. Enough Republicans in the Senate came to their aid to pass the measure. Mr. TAFT killed it. He will have great trouble in explaining his conduct to the people whose mandate he has defeated.

Consider for a moment how much stronger and more satisfactory the position of the President would have been had he signed the Wool bill. He would then have been able to point to a concrete evidence of his good faith regarding the people's demand for tariff reduction. This evidence would also have been cumulative. It would have been added to that contained in Mr. TAFT's brilliant service in securing the trade reciprocity agreement with Canada. And he could still have used his Tariff Board for all it is really worth. If it presented sound reasons for amending the wool schedule established in the bill of the extra session, he could have pressed such amendment with no risk of suspicion as to his motives. If it made practicable suggestions for further reductions in other schedules, he could have urged them with great effect. He would have stood before the country as an advocate of real reduction of the tariff, using the Tariff Board as a help and not as a hindrance to such reduction.

Of still greater importance is the fact that, had he accepted the Wool bill, he would have been free to devote all his strength, in the campaign of education, to the advocacy of his supremely beneficent policy of general arbitration. In all probability, could he direct his efforts chiefly to this, he would carry the country with him. It would have been a great and noble victory, strengthening the reign of peace and conferring precious benefits upon his own and upon other nations. He may win it yet, but he has made it much harder to do so, and needlessly harder. We are very sorry. The record of the past year has been for him a really splendid one. We had hoped that it would be consistently carried out with unbroken success and honor. It is a great pity that he has tangled it with an ill-advised excursion into party politics.

LABOR DAY.

Labor Day promises to be fair and not too warm for the sports to which many of the millions who observe it devote themselves. It has become one of the great play days of the year, scarcely second in that respect to Independence Day. It is also a welcome and appropriate holiday, well placed in the calendar. To the multitude for whom the hot months do not bring relief from labor, change of scene, and rest, the two and a half days of outing and enjoyment afforded by the business holiday on Monday are a boon.

Labor Day has its formalities and serious functions, of course, which are alike honorable and dignified. The tribute to labor is particularly significant in a country which has no recognized leisurely class, where nearly all men and an increasing proportion of women work for a living. To-day is a festival for all. It was instituted for no class or set or sect, and its spirit reaches and comprehends the whole people.

INTEREST IN THE BEATTIE CASE.

The Beattie case furnishes a very striking illustration of how small a place the world has become when there is a gripping story of real human concern to be told. Most of the newspaper correspondents sent down from this city specially to report the trial at Chesterfield Court House, Va., have referred to this trial as the most interesting ever held in Virginia. The statement is very far from being correct. The court proceedings have been almost commonplace when compared with some murder trials held in Virginia in the last three decades, though none has attracted half as much public attention as this outside of the State.

It must be remembered, when speaking of interesting trials generally in Virginia, that AARON BURR was tried for treason before Chief Justice MARSHALL in Richmond, and that JEFFERSON DAVIS was arraigned for trial in Richmond on the same charge. Only two Virginia murder trials in recent years disclosed more elements of dramatic interest than the Beattie case has so far done. They were the Cluverius and the McCue cases. CLUVERIUS, a young man of good family, was tried and found guilty late in the 80's of having drowned in the Old Reservoir in Richmond the woman whom he was engaged to marry. He was hanged on purely circumstantial evidence. To this day nothing has ever developed to prove conclusively that he was guilty. McCUE was a prominent lawyer and ex-Mayor of Charlottesville, where THOMAS JEFFERSON had his home and where he founded the University of Virginia. He was convicted of killing his wife with a shotgun. He confessed on the gallows.

Both of these cases attracted little attention outside of Virginia. Since then, however, human interests have broadened, and the public concern no longer fails, even if the scene of action is laid a long way off, so long as the story is a good one. Through the newspapers the world is rapidly becoming just a big neighborhood with every community touching elbows.

THE BASEBALL SEASON.

The record of the baseball season is a continued story in daily installments, and a coherent review of it before the climax, and the settlement for a year of the world's championship, is out of the question. That the popularity of the game increases year by year seems undeniable, though it seemed years ago that the league games could scarcely attract larger crowds. This Summer's experience has proved the contrary. Attendance has been larger, enthusiasm more vociferous. Baseball is the one uppermost and unfailing subject of American conversation. Politics, labor troubles, aviation, great disasters, even pugilism accompanied by mob violence, do not momentarily drive "Matty," "Rube," "Wagner," the "Cubs" and the "Tigers" from the tip of the public tongue. Listen in the elevators, on the street cars, in hotel corridors—there may be some talk on other subjects, but the latest victory of the Giants is never neglected.

The home team of our town (in the National League) is, indeed, making a glorious record. It dominates the first chapter in this year's tale of baseball, and we infer that it will be conspicuous at "finis." The chance of the Giants winning the pennant is so good that crowing is inevitable. Perhaps much of their triumph is due to the marvelous pitching of Mr. MARQUARD, playfully called "Rube," and described by the technical experts as an eminent "southpaw." But Mr. MATHEWSON is entitled to his share of the season's glory, while it is likely that the success has been due chiefly to the fact that the whole team has been on its mettle. The Giants have been playing ball. In the American League the Athletics (Philadelphia's team) lead as they did last year. We are justified in hoping that, if they meet the Giants in the crowning series, they will not triumph as they did over the Chicago Nationals last year.

THE BLACK HAND.

That the Black Hand has not much to fear in the way either of "betrayal" or of resistance from the honest and industrious Italians upon whom it preys is only too apparent. The collectors of tribute, the throwers of bombs, the users of shotguns and daggers, move about in the "colonies," their identity known to many and suspected by more, but only rarely, and then usually by mere blind luck, is one of them captured. If "caught red-handed," as the saying is, conviction is easy enough, but it is extremely difficult when all depends upon the testimony of Italian witnesses.

This is a discouraging state of affairs, but it has one feature that can be noted with something of hopefulness—the highly creditable sensitiveness of our Italian residents as a group or class to any intimation or charge that they are any more sympathetic with crime than other people or that among them there is any exceptional number of criminals. The Neapolitans and the Sicilians are as prompt to resent and protest against such imputations as are the Northern Italians, and as vigorously they demand recognition for the fact that the great majority of them are good citizens, hard-working, thrifty, and abstemious.

It is to this sensitiveness, we think, that constant appeal should be made, not, indeed, by denying the truth of the claims on which it is based, but by demanding the removal of such excuse for doubting that truth as is created when reputable Italians withhold assistance from the police—when they put difficulties in the way of the police. Of course, the Italian is under no more obligation than any other citizen or resident alien himself to do police work, but he is under as much as any other to help when he can toward the preservation of public peace and safety, and he is not absolved from the performance of that duty because it involves a certain amount of personal risk and necessitates action to which he has not been accustomed.

The protector of criminals, no matter how reluctant, is the accomplice of criminals, and there is no unfairness in placing full responsibility for the existence of the Black Hand upon those Italians who submit to its tyranny and keep silent as to its operations and membership. For one of them to take the opposite course may be dangerous; for all, or even a considerable number, of them to do it would decrease the peril to nothing, or nearly nothing.

THE LUSITANIA'S RECORD.

The Lusitania left her pier promptly at 6 o'clock last evening, after a stay of about thirty-two hours in port. In that brief time 1,642 passengers were disembarked and 700 taken aboard, 1,000 tons of freight were unloaded and 1,000 tons loaded, the big ship was cleaned, small repairs were made, coal was taken in, and the larders were filled with many tons of provisions. An army of men, as the saying goes, certainly enough to fill two ordinary regiments, worked night and day on the many and various tasks required thus to break the record of time for an ocean liner in this port.

The story of the feat is interesting reading. Surely peace has its victories as well as war. The Lusitania will make her accustomed quick eastward trip, and try to equal her New York record at the Liverpool docks. Thousands of our fellow-citizens are waiting to return to their homes, after their summering in Europe. The Lusitania will be on her way back very soon, with more passengers and more freight. Such speed costs money, but there is nothing the modern American is more willing to pay for than speed.

SELF-EXILE.

ANNE WARNER FRENCH is not the first native of this Republic to discover that the country is very young and crude, that serious effort in the domain of art often lacks appreciation here, and to seek sympathy and inspiration in a residence abroad. She is not even the first writer of fiction based on observation of American life to decide that her subject can be studied more agreeably, in the perspective, from a European home. Mr. HENRY JAMES transferred his literary workshop to England many years ago.

To be sure, Mr. JAMES's books have never been in the class of "best sellers," and some of Mrs. FRENCH's, we believe, have been quite in that class. Mr. JAMES must have felt, even in his prime, that he was caviare to the general in the land of his birth; even "Daisy Miller" lacked the measure of appreciation secured all over the country by the Susan Clegg stories. But we may not insist too strongly on a comparison of Mrs. FRENCH with Mr. JAMES. There are some points of difference, one being that Mr. JAMES has produced literature.

Mrs. FRENCH will take with her to Europe the best wishes of her compatriots. We can well spare those of our countrymen and countrywomen who are happier in foreign parts. It is agreeable to dwell, for a time, amid the mellowed associations of the Old World—but the sense of exile is not pleasant. We hope Mrs. FRENCH will escape that. It would have been more heroic for her to remain in Minnesota, to set the good example of avoiding personalities in conversation, to have exerted herself to train servants to good service, and tried, by her own good manners, to improve the social qualities of her vicinage. But, by and large, we have had our share of heroes and heroines, and, obviously, Mrs. FRENCH is not made of their stuff.

The policemen who turned in their shields because the new stationary posts were not to their liking did well to resign. Not every man can stand the rigors of police work. But they seem to agree with the health of most members of the force. Few are to be noted who bear signs of fatigue or nervous exhaustion. It is no argument against the new system of stationary posts that it tires the feet and wears upon the nerves of a few. There are many recruits ready to step into the shoes of the men who have dropped out.

Fifty thousand Americans left European ports last week in the homeward rush. Many hundreds of thousands of Americans will leave American seashore and mountain resorts to-night and to-morrow to get back to the routine of the Autumn and Winter. The number of domestic homecomers will be swelled by the crowds returning from their out-of-town trips over the holiday. The railroads and express companies will reap a rich harvest, certainly, but not without a good deal of extra labor. The homecoming crowd will not lack welcome. There is plenty of room for all of them right here, and the time is at hand to "get busy."

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

The Hunter Pleads for the Hunted.

Perhaps only HEANY, the prosecutor; BURNS, the detective, and SPRECKELS, the provider of money, did more than FREMONT OLDER, editor of The San Francisco Bulletin, to bring about the disclosures and trials that resulted—and, so far as the infliction of legal penalties goes, there was no other result—in sending ABE RUEF to prison. His pursuit of the grafting boss began before any of the more widely known men took up the chase, and it was continued mercilessly till the very end, in spite of the fact that for him it involved dangers and sacrifices greater than theirs.

Yet, in an article printed in The Survey of this city, Mr. OLDER writes that from the day RUEF started for the penitentiary he began to be sorry for him, and that he would be glad to see the man released at the end of one year's confinement!

As to RUEF's guilt of all that was charged against him Mr. OLDER has no doubt. The first reason he gives for viewing the guilty man with compassion and treating him with leniency is that the control of public necessities by private corporations creates temptations too strong for mere human beings to resist. The second is that the indictments against all the other graft defendants have been dismissed, and RUEF has as companion at San Quentin not one taker of bribes or one giver of them. "Certainly," says Mr. OLDER, "no fair-minded man will be able to see any justice in this." His third reason is that many recent talks with RUEF have convinced him that "he is seriously planning when he leaves the prison to devote the remnant of his fortune and his extraordinary talents in developing the sociological work that is yet to be done and that lies heavily upon the mind of every thoughtful man."

This is all, and it seems to be hardly enough. The plea as to temptation rests on Mr. OLDER's own answer to a question which, to say the least of it, is still open. That the punishment of RUEF alone is not full justice is obvious, but that is not to deny, or at any rate it is not to disprove, the absence of "any justice." On the contrary, it demonstrates the need to get some more justice of the same kind, and a harsh critic might say that whatever is unsatisfactory in the present situation is due the fact that the fight against corruption in San Francisco was not kept up long enough or carried far enough. The prophecy that RUEF, if released, would become an efficient and sincere reformer of society is based on belief, not knowledge.

A Right Never Refused.

One of the birds that sing from the southeastern corner of this page, demanded, one day last week, for herself and other lady-birds, the right, from times immemorial exercised by gentleman-birds, to proclaim in harmonious notes and numbers the moving charms of the other sex. The demand was neatly expressed, but it was absurdly needless, since it has never been denied.

The failure of the lady-birds to use their liberty, to admit a longing or even a willingness to use it, is a mystery of long standing. The existence of the mystery, indeed, has not been often recognized or made the subject of comment, but the psychologists have had it on their little list for years and years, and have investigated it not altogether without success.

They say, ungallantly and without the use of laborious metaphor, that women poets, when they undertake to describe the soft influences of love and to voice its soft emotions, have almost invariably done so after taking, or trying to take, the masculine point of view. The reason for this is given as partly the carefully preserved convention that women must give no public expression to their emotions, and still more because, all men having sung feminine charms, women, imitative and echoing, have aspired to do the same thing.

There was no compulsion in the matter; it was preference, conscious or unconscious, that ruled, and our complaining chorister, or any other, as soon and as melodiously—we are tempted to say as ardently, but something whispers "No!"—as she chooses, may write her sonnet on "The Eyes of Pete." If good enough, it's sure to get printed. It ought to be welcomed with a special warmth for some "woman's page" or some "ladies' journal."

Ten Mile River.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although these copious rains of the past week have perhaps restored us to a six months' supply of water, for which we should all be truly grateful, it seems to me that perhaps the expedient of tapping Ten Mile River is not entirely eliminated, for it is still two or three years ahead before we get an unlimited supply from the Catskills, and in the meantime another long spell of drought would put us in the same direful position we have been, so to protect us against such an emergency perhaps the Ten Mile River project should be still considered.

THE WRONG TO COLOMBIA.

President Roosevelt Seized Panama Strip Contrary to the Treaty.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of to-day I notice a letter from O. N. Percy calling attention to your editorial article "Looking Southward," and the omission of one great point which he considers I have overlooked in my criticisms of the attitude of this country toward business relations with South America. Evidently Mr. Percy has not read my various articles on this subject, otherwise he would have noticed that I made a particular point of the adverse feelings of South American merchants, as well as the public in general, toward us, largely on account, as they say, of our arrogant and independent attitude in our relations with them, they especially being incensed by reason of the indiscreet diplomacy (?) shown during the past series of years by our Department of State, particularly in connection with certain questionable claims which have been brought up against them. While my article did not especially mention the Panama episode, the details of that affair, manoeuvred and carried through by former President Roosevelt, are well understood throughout South America, causing additional suspicions as to the honesty of our purpose.

Mr. Percy is quite right respecting the Colombia-Panama-Canal Zone affair, and, to speak mildly, the absolute want of good faith which this country showed toward Colombia, whose treaty with the United States—an exact copy of which I had shown me when recently in Colombia—provided, in so many words, that the United States guaranteed the absolute "integrity" of the Republic of Colombia; in the face of which President Roosevelt, through a questionable pretext, practically seized the Canal Zone strip from the Colombians, fomenting the revolution between Colombia and Panama, resulting in the separation. In other words, Mr. Roosevelt and his Administration absolutely broke our treaty agreement and faith with the Colombians.

To be sure, the Colombian Government had been for some time "backing and filling" with respect to its promised concession of this Canal Zone at a fixed price and was evidently trying to make as sharp a trade as possible, but this was no excuse for the high-handed action which was taken in acquiring this valuable property without a fair and reasonable compensation to Colombia, the country which owned it, and it is such occurrences, as Mr. Percy so well states, that are keeping us in bad odor with all of our South American neighbors, whose friendship and business interests should naturally be with us.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN SCHOOLS

Believes It Is Needed, and the State Monopolizes Them Too Much.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The changed opinion of Dr. G. Stanley Hall, the President of Clark University, as to the wisdom and need of reinforcing moral instruction by very definite religious instruction is surely worthy of attention. It is but two years since Dr. Hall said, not for the first time, that moral education could succeed in these progressive days without any reference to religion, and he went abroad to Japan, where he hoped to find such a system in operation. He has come back a wiser man.

There must surely be something very wrong indeed in our astonishing public school system in this country if we are to judge by some of its results. It is the custom with us to decry Italy as a land of bloodshed, yet our own statistics make us out as guilty of several times as many murders per 100,000 inhabitants. If education per se was able to do what is claimed for it, our papers each morning would be much more fit to read.

Just what is wrong with our boasted system, aside from what Dr. Hall now says is lacking, is perhaps the very monopoly which the State has this long time tried to obtain in the business. In fact, education as a State function is a failure. The difficulty of enforcing the compulsory education law is proof that numberless folk fear the result of the alleged "education"; few, if any, of those who shout loudest about their devotion to education would pay directly even $5 per year school tax; when their children are in school it is as much as a teacher's life is worth to suggest not promoting a pupil; the education-mad parent would be so angry at the implication that his boy was a duckling, not a swan, although all concerned know very well that non-promotion would be the best thing possible. Now comes Dr. Hall and stings our calm complacency a good deal by indorsing the parochial school idea. Under Archbishop Farley five or six new ones have been opened each year, and, I suppose, as many as usual are nearly ready for September.

ROBERT P. GREEN.

New York, Sept. 2, 1911.

Rowdies of American Parentage.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reading your recent article on "The Gangsters" and your correspondent's letter thereon to-day, I noted that both referred to the education that these rowdies received in the schools. I was surprised to read in your comment the statement that "The gangsters are, unfortunately, representatives of a large class of children of foreign parents, who despise the language, customs, morals, and religion of their elders, and are not yet imbued with the American spirit and traditions." Is this statement an assumption of fact or is it based on an investigation of the parentage of those rowdies who have been arrested?

It strikes me from some of my observations that this charge is not peculiarly applicable to only the children of foreign parentage. I believe that both the rowdyism and despising the "customs, morals, and religion of their elders" is sometimes more applicable to the offspring of native-born parents, and is becoming too commonly an American spirit of the times.

The Prizefight.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I went to see the international argument between Monsieur Wells and Monsieur "Knockout" last night. Great fight and "somebluggy." But, why is betting on horses Anathema Maranatha, and driven from the State with beating of tom-toms and loud cries, while two boys beat each other savagely in public, the State looking on pleasantly and taking its 5 per cent. "bit" of the proceeds? Why not a cockfighting commission at 5 per cent? Personally, I prefer cockfighting. They fight because they enjoy it, not for money.

And the red-blooded people who came to the surface last night, in, around, and about the Garden—Tophet's Pit vomiting its refuse, the scrapings of hell, Sing Sing, and the Tenderloin! The State was in partnership with the lowest class of crooks, and our policemen were acting as ticket takers. Let the good work go on.

Pronunciation of "Been."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why did Webster give the pronunciation of the word "been"—the past participle of the verb "to be," as "bin"? Derived from the Saxon "bean," as Webster himself points out, I cannot find that the word was ever pronounced "bin" in England except by the entirely illiterate. The English laboring classes still so pronounce it to my personal knowledge.

Nor does Webster himself give any explanation of his adoption of this pronunciation, although one would think that some reason would be shown for a choice of pronunciation, which appears to be so curiously at variance with Webster's "common-sense" policy. As one who has been converted from an English distrust of Webster's "Americanisms" (which appear to be merely somewhat musty "Englishisms") to be admired of the great American scholar, I hope that some one of your readers may be able to satisfactorily explain why "been" should rhyme with "sin."

CANNERS AND DR. WILEY.

They Like Him and His Cause and Have Stood Up for Him.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The attention of this office has been called to a publication in your issue of July 23 entitled "Results of the Fight Against Food and Drug Fakers."

We have no knowledge respecting the statements that are made in the article, except so far as the canning industry is concerned. For your information we beg to say that immediately after the charges against Dr. Wiley were made public the National Canners' Association, through its President, W. R. Roach of Hart, Mich., telegraphed a protest of the association against the removal of Dr. Wiley. This was afterward followed by formal resolutions, which were also sent to the President.

One of the first organized bodies declaring in favor of the pure food law was the canning industry. Time and again the National Conventions of the National Canners' Association have indorsed Dr. Wiley and his course. Within the past four months the Executive Committee of the National Canners' Association has adopted resolutions reaffirming its opposition to the use of benzoate of soda, formaldehyde, boraxine, or saccharin.

While we know as a matter of course that your publication was without malice or an intention to harm our industry in any way, yet the hundreds of thousands of readers of your paper cannot fail to have a wrong impression of our industry, and this impression works detriment in the way of decreasing consumption.

The Pistol Law Is Plain.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There being some agitation on the subject of the Sullivan firearms law, so called because it was introduced into the State Senate by Senator Timothy D. Sullivan, I respectfully submit to your readers the following facts relative to this law:

As to whether it forbids the ordinary citizen to defend his home with a pistol, you will notice that this law, in one paragraph, declares that any person "who shall have in his possession a pistol shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," and then, in the following paragraph, it declares that any person "who shall have or carry concealed upon his person" any pistol "shall be guilty of a felony." Note that in order to avoid any misunderstanding as to whether the words "in his possession" mean "in his physical possession" or not, a separate paragraph is devoted to the crime of having a pistol in one's physical possession, making this offense much graver than that of having a pistol in one's possession. To still further emphasize the prohibition against having a pistol in any kind of possession, physical or otherwise, this law also forbids any dealer from selling a pistol to anybody who has not "a permit to possess or carry such pistol."

Avoiding Tuberculosis by Breathing.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The work being done by the Charity Organization Society in instructing persons how to avoid contracting tuberculosis is certainly commendable, but this work could be made much more beneficial were it supplemented by instructions in the proper mode of breathing. Directions are given concerning the mode of living, such as sleeping in well-lighted and thoroughly ventilated rooms, eating nourishing food, remaining in the open air, &c., but not a word is said regarding how the breathing organs should be exercised in order that they may perform their functions properly.

Consumption can be not only avoided, but it can be checked by means of bringing fresh air to the weak or diseased parts of the lungs, and strengthening them by means of a regular inhalation of oxygen and a continual exhalation of the carbonic gas and other waste material.

I am prompted to write this letter after listening to one of the lecturers provided by the Charity Organization Society at one of its noonday meetings.

The Pushcart Problem.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read a letter written by "C. D. R." and published in your columns on Aug. 29. In it "C. D. R." advocates the abolishing—or to be more correct the total annihilation—of the "pushcart vendor of eatables" from the business streets of New York, not because he (the peddler) is a menace to health and safety, but because "buyers of their penny wares (his own fellow-citizens) cast the refuse not only on the streets, but on the sidewalks, never thinking to throw it into the tubs provided for this purpose." Alas! how hideously true! Now, I am not a peddler myself, nor a member of any pushcart association, (more's the pity,) but just a plain American citizen, but I regret to say that this policy of "whipping the cur because the baying of the hound annoys us" is only too frequently pursued by us.

L. A. P.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish emphatically to contradict "C. D. R.," who condemns in your to-day's issue the pushcart peddlers in the downtown streets. They do not congest traffic, for they are constantly on the move, and if you wish to buy fruit you have to run after the peddler and beg him to stop. The fruit peddlers are a boon to a majority of employes downtown, whose luncheon consists chiefly in just the fruit they buy from these peddlers. For every person objecting to the obstruction of the streets by these vendors there are two or three who are glad they can get good, wholesome nourishment cheaply. I am a girl stenographer in the Wall Street district, but I should be sorry if to please a number of cranky people I "and the likes of me" were deprived of part of our daily luncheon. Those who buy fruit generally take it along and clean it thoroughly before eating it. And why sneer at "penny wares"? There must also be such. Everybody cannot afford to pay a quarter for a peach at some exclusive fruit store.

A TRAGEDY.

He was just a dog, Mister—that's all;
And all of us boys called him Bub;
He was curly and not very tall
And he hadn't a tail—just a stub.
His tail froze one cold night, you see,
We just pulled the rest of him through.
No—he didn't have much pedigree—
Perhaps that was frozen off, too.

He always seemed quite well behaved
And he never had many bad fights.
In Summer he used to be shaved
And he slept in the woodshed o' nights.
Sometimes he would wake up too soon
And cry, if his tail got a chill;
Some nights he would bark at the moon,
But some nights he would sleep very still.

He knew how to play hide-and-seek
And he always would come when you'd call;
He would play dead, roll over, and speak
And learned it in no time at all.
Sometimes he would growl, just in play,
But he never would bite, and his worst
Was to bark at the postman one day,
But the postman, he barked at him first.

He used to chase cats up a tree,
But that was just only in fun;
And a cat was as safe as could be—
Unless it should start out to run;
Sometimes he'd chase children and throw
Them down, just while running along,
And then lick their faces to show
He didn't mean anything wrong.

He was chasing an automobile
So he just gave a queer little squeal
And curled up and stretched out and died.
His tail it was not very long,
He was curly and not very tall;
But he never did anything wrong—
He was just our dog, Mister—that's all.

CHARTER COMMITTEE HEEDS THE MAYOR

At His Request They Restore Governor's Power of Removal of the Mayor and Others.

MORE ADVICE ACCEPTED

Changes Made to Meet Dr. Abbott's Civil Service System — Educational Provisions Modified.

Assemblyman Foley, on behalf of the Joint Cities Committee of the Legislature, which has been considering objections to the proposed new city Charter, announced last night several more important changes in the draft. A number of these changes were recommended by Mayor Gaynor, and the action of the committee in respect to these provisions is in keeping with the Mayor's own statement a few days ago that the committee had agreed to make all the changes he had suggested, although only part of them were announced at that time.

Among the most important of the changes now announced is the restoration of the provision for the removal of the Mayor, Controller, President of the Board of Aldermen and Borough Presidents by the Governor. This had been eliminated in the draft that has been under consideration, and the Mayor suggested that it be restored with the restriction that removals should be only for some dereliction of duty.

"The growing disposition," said the Mayor, "to remove because in the opinion of the removing power the accused official does not measure up to a standard of intelligence or competency set up by such removing power, should be checked. The people pass upon the intelligence and competency of those running for office."

It has also been suggested that the power of removal be lodged in the Appellate Division or the Legislature, but the Mayor favored its retention by the Governor. The committee did not say whether the restoration of this power is to be restricted to charges of dereliction in office, but the assumption is that this is the case. The omission of this provision for removal is one of the chief points on which the Citizens' Union attacked the Charter draft.

Another important change announced is that the Chamberlain has been made appointive, as at present, instead of elective. This also was recommended by Mayor Gaynor. Another recommendation of his that has been adopted is the limitation of special policemen to appointments requested by corporations operating public service utilities and financial institutions.

The provision criticised by Dr. Lyman Abbott and others as open to construction of permitting civil service positions now in the competitive class being placed in the exempt class by statute has been eliminated.

The power to reduce and cancel assessments is given to the Chamberlain only after the consent of the Controller upon the written recommendation of the Corporation Counsel.

In the Department of Education the provisions restricting the appointment of Commissioners to residents of different boroughs has been eliminated. The restriction upon the appointment of Superintendents and Directors to teachers having experience in the schools of the City of New York has been eliminated. It has been provided that the successors to the present appointed members of the Board of Examiners shall be appointed from eligible lists established by the Municipal Civil Service Commission after competitive examination. The provision preventing merging of eligible lists for teachers has been modified, so as to give full power in the matter of the Board of Education.

The Borough President is vested with authority to compel the proper restoration of pavements or other street surfaces, disturbed by other departments, individuals, and corporations.

The provision given priority of lien to expenses of the Tenement House Department incurred in the execution of its orders, over the liens of mortgages and other incumbrances has been eliminated.

The examination and licensing of engineers and firemen have been transferred from the police to the Department of Licenses, which is created by the Charter.

A provision has been inserted that no consent of an Alderman is necessary in connection with the granting of any license for newsstand, bootblack, and other privilege. This also is in line with the views of the Mayor.

The recommendation of the Borough Presidents has been adopted providing that the Board of Estimate may initiate proceedings for the construction of sewers without the consent of the local board.

FIRST CHINESE NAVAL VISITOR

Cruiser Hai-Chi Soon to Fly Yellow Dragon in New York Harbor.

The Chinese cruiser Hai-Chi, the biggest warship in the Chinese Navy, is due to arrive in New York and anchor in the Hudson River some time next Sunday. The Hai-Chi, which is a protected cruiser of 4,300 tons displacement, which in many respects resembles the old American cruisers of the San Francisco and Chicago types, will be the first Chinese warship that ever visited New York, and as her schedule calls for a stay in New York waters of at least a week, all the New Yorkers who want to see what a cruiser flying the Yellow Dragon of China looks like will have that chance.

The Hai-Chi will bring a full complement of Chinese officers and 450 seamen. She comes as the guest of the Nation, and during her stay in American waters the Government will see to it that the officers and bluejackets have such a good time that they will not soon forget their visit here. A naval officer will undoubtedly be detailed from Washington to represent the Government and to remain with the cruiser until she leaves for Mexico, the first country she will visit after leaving the United States.

When the Hai-Chi drops anchor in the Hudson, between Seventy-second and 125th Streets, New Yorkers will see a cruiser with a sharp, knifelike bow, two military masts, two big yellow funnels, and carrying in two round-topped turrets, as her main battery, two 8-inch guns, one in each turret. Besides these guns she carries ten 4.7-inch, twelve three-pounders, and six Maxim quick-firing guns, and is fitted with two 18-inch torpedo tubes.

The Chinese residents in New York are going to make a great to-do over their countrymen, and numerous affairs for officers and enlisted men alike are scheduled to take place in the Chinese quarter. Many other functions given by Americans will be on the programme, it is expected, for the entertainment of the visitors.

The Hai-Chi comes here from British waters, where the vessel officially represented the Emperor and Government of China during the naval pageants which were part of the coronation observances.

TAFT SAILS FOR BEVERLY.

Gale Is Lost Somewhere and He Leaves Islesboro Under Ideal Conditions.

ISLESBORO, Me., Sept. 3.—The President and Mrs. Taft brought their brief visit here to a close to-day. At 4 o'clock the Mayflower weighed anchor and with Lieut. Commander Symington on the bridge, steamed out of Ames Cove for Beverly. The Summer capital should be sighted again early to-morrow morning and the President plans to resume his Summer routine of golfing, speech writing and motoring immediately.

This was a perfect Summer day such as the President has not seen since he left Washington, with a blue sky flecked with sailing white clouds and a fresh, warm land breeze. The gale that threatened last night got lost somewhere in the early morning hours and the sea was smooth when the Mayflower sailed away, the President sitting aft on the quarterdeck, attired in a double-breasted blue serge coat and flannel trousers.

NEWPORT FAST LIFE SCORED BY RECTORS

Circular Letter Denouncing Sunday Social Activities Read from Episcopal Pulpits.

DUE TO GOLF CLUB DANCE

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 3.—The clergymen of the Episcopal Churches of Newport and Middletown met a few days ago to take combined action against entertaining in the Summer colony of Newport on Sundays. They drew up a circular letter and forwarded it to the Bishop of Rhode Island, the Right Rev. James De Wolf Perry, who signed and indorsed the letter.

To-day at all the Episcopal Churches—Trinity, Emanuel, St. John's, and St. George's, and those in Middletown—the rectors read the circular which follows:

> In view of the social activities in Newport on the Lord's Day, and recognizing that such activities have insensibly grown to such an extent as to encroach upon the hours of divine service and detract from the sacredness of the day and home, and, furthermore, set an unworthy example before the young, we, the undersigned, deeply concerned for the welfare of society and for the cause of Christ's religion, feel it a solemn duty to state in a definite manner the positon of the Church in the matter. Following the authority of Holy Scripture, the Church has formulated the following canon—the obedience to which is incumbent upon every one of us:
>
> Canon 43. Of the Celebration of Sundays.—All persons within this Church shall celebrate and keep the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, by regular participation in the public worship of the Church, by hearing the Word of God read and taught and by other acts of devotion and works of charity, using all Godly and sober conversation.
> We therefore urge the Christian people of Newport to abstain from such forms of amusement as infringe upon the proper observance of the Lord's Day, and to recognize the duty of assisting the clergy in upholding its sacredness, and to live according to their Christian profession as "living epistles, read and known of all men."
>
> CHARLES F. BEATTIE,
> STANLEY C. HUGHES,
> GEORGE VERNON DICKEY,
> GEORGE GRENVILLE MERRELL,
> LATTA GRISWOLD,
> JOHN B. DIMAN,
> JAMES P. CONOVER,
> JOHN CORNELL.

After reading the circular leter the Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, rector of Trinity Church, stated briefly that the letter was due to the very large increase of fast living in Newport into which church people were being drawn. He said:

"A good many of the old Newport families are dying out and new ones are coming to take their places who in some cases have different ideas from the old families. Entertainments Saturday evening and Sunday seem now to be the habit in Newport. Our appeal is to live in a more careful way and not be drawn into irreligious and irreverent practices and make the Church stand for the best influences in society, because the Church is the body of Christ."

The Rev. Dr. George Vernon Dickey, rector of St. George's Church, made the letter the subject of his sermon, saying, in part:

"During the week just past a number of the clergy of the Church residing in Newport met together informally and decided to issue an open letter concerning Sunday amusements and the position of the Church in regard to them. Some of the clergy had been interviewed, to get an expression of their views about a certain Saturday night ball given by one of Newport's Summer colony. This ball, to believe the stories printed about it, became an orgy and ended in an almost unbelievable disregard of the Lord's day. In view of the publicity given to Newport social doings, many might be led to believe that such things are typical of Newport and that the Church tamely acquiesces in them without one word of protest. It was a peculiarly fitting time, therefore, to state the position of the Church and to utter a protest and a warning.

"Possibly, and very likely, this protest will not help the matter very much. It is not likely to reach those whose conduct gave occasion for it. They who offend in such things are not often found within the sound of a preacher's voice. And, moreover, they are more amenable to the voice of ridicule contained in certain sheets than they are to the presentation of God's truth from the pulpits of the city. But let us not make the mistake of saying that all society is alike.

"There are many who come to Newport in the Summer and mingle in its most exclusive set who are restive under such leadership as brings them into conflict with God's laws. The difficulty with them is how to separate themselves from such things without seeming puritanical. It is very hard to keep from following society when your interests are identified with society. But we know that there are men and women here who, though possessed of great wealth and social position, are neither frivolous nor lawless, but, on the contrary, are trying to use their wealth and influence in the best way.

"As for antagonizing those whom we wish to win, their conduct shows that they have very little respect for the teachings of the Church. Men are afraid to speak their convictions because they think it will injure their business. Men condone evil and partners in it simply because of fear lest their living should be taken from them. This is the reason here in Newport why grocers and others connive with butchers and chefs to obtain a wholly unjust price for household supplies. My experience is that the man who is upright and honest in all his dealings, refusing to be a party to anything unjust or dishonorable, is likely in the long run to have his conduct vindicated. Anyhow, this life of ours is not measured by a money standard.

"'Is not the life more than meat and the body more than raiment?'

"And the last objection to this protest which I wish to notice is the one made by those who think this disregard of the Lord's Day no offense at all. I think this the most serious offense of all. Not because I disagree with them, but because of the state of mind revealed by it.

"It surely is a serious thing when men's moral judgment becomes so warped that they call evil good. There is a stage in the process of freezing to death when all the faculties become numb and there is no apparent physical discomfort. Any one reaching that stage is utterly unable to realize the danger of it. There is a process of moral atrophy also when moral perceptions become numb, the power of moral discrimination becomes dulled, and men are unable correctly to judge conduct in accordance with true moral standards. We are in danger of such a condition in this community. Evil does not correct itself.

"'The wages of sin,' says the Holy Scriptures, 'is death.' The whole tendency of wrongdoing is downward. I think the history of Newport's society will illustrate this pretty conclusively. Time was when, with all her fashion and gayety, Newport had some apparent outward respect for God's laws. Sunday entertainments and amusements found few to uphold them. The institution of marriage was regarded as sacred. There was not the gambling for high stakes at bridge which now is so universal. But gradually, so gradually that few were aware of the change, Saturday night and Sunday entertaining became more elaborate. The excuse was that there were few men here except on those days, Sunday luncheons, at first informal and only for house guests, then music, and finally dancing was introduced, until the 'day of rest' for the poor, tired men who toiled in business all the week became the most strenuous day of all.

"Then as for bridge and its attending gambling, it is only necessary to call attention to the fact that the laws of the State and God's laws are being broken. So universal has the habit become that no one can expect to have a good time unless able to play the game.

"And as for the divorce evil, is the present state of society under the operation of our divorce courts better than that of fifty years ago, when no one even thought of such separation? All this has come about slowly and insidiously, and is simply the outcome of evil unchecked, working its way downward.

"I do not know whether you agree with me as to the evil of all this, whether you think with me that such exhibitions as were seen in Newport last Sunday are shameful and should make us blush. If you do not, I feel quite sure that the lawless spirit which is working in all these things has reached us all and that there is the more reason for my standing here and calling on you all who have taken the name of Christian to look to yourselves first. Am I simply old-fashioned and old fogy in my opinions, or am I right and is this God's law? If I am right, then in God's name and for the sake of our Christianity and the salvation of this beautiful city, let us set ourselves against these things in our own lives. I call you men and women to a higher level of attainment in your lives."

Evidently the circular letter was brought about by the costume dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas at the Newport Golf Club last week, which began Saturday night and ended at 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

On the other hand, golf, tennis, dinners, luncheons, and other entertainments have been held on Sundays in Newport for a long time without anything being said from the pulpit until, some ten years ago, Braddin Hamilton, then a prominent clergyman of the Episcopal Church, delivered a sermon at All Saints' Memorial Chapel relative to golf playing on Sunday which caused a flurry in Church circles.

To-day the baseball park was thrown open and a baseball team of the New England League played the crack Newport team before crowded benches. Among the spectators were some of the clergy, members of the Board of Aldermen, and other officials and citizens. Excursion boats landed thousands of people, who bathed at Easton's Beach. Trolley cars carried their full quota of visitors to and from the same beach.

Restaurants and candy and ice cream shops were doing business and sailing parties were numerous. It was not difficult to secure food or drink in any part of the city.

ONLY TWO FLY AT BOSTON.

Beachey Leads in Winnings So Far—$10,000 Prize Flight To-day.

BOSTON, Sept. 3.—Two Wright biplanes, with Thomas Sopwith and George W. Beatty as pilots, flew along the shores of Dorchester Bay at sunset this evening, furnishing the only touch of life during the day at the aviation grounds of the Harvard-Boston aero meet, which will continue with its fifth day's programme to-morrow. Joseph A. Cummings, who fell into the Neponset River Saturday morning, was about the grounds for a short time and apparently little hurt by his mishap beyond a bad cut on the chin. He expects to have his Blériot in shape to-morrow for some of the events.

Up to date Lincoln Beachey has won the bulk of the money, taking in $3,630. Sopwith, the Englishman, comes second with $2,254 and Ovington third with $1,532, while Claude Grahame-White of England, whose work was the feature of the meet last year, has won only $660 to date.

It was definitely stated to-night that Grahame-White would not enter the cross-country flight to-morrow from Squantum to Nashua, N. H., and through Worcester and Providence back to the starting place, the prize for which is $10,000. The Englishman says that the course over several cities is too dangerous. Sopwith, the other Englishman; Ely, and Beatty, will likewise remain at home for the local contests of the day to-morrow.

Arthur B. Stone, who has two Blériots of 100 horse power and 50 horse power, and Earle L. Ovington, in a 50 horse power Blériot, will go after the $10,000 offered for monoplanes, and Harry N. Atwood and Lieut. A. D. Milling, U. S. A., in Burgess-Wright biplanes, will race for the $7,500 offered for biplanes.

FRENCH AIRMAN KILLED.

Maron Falls Near Chartres When Motor Fails and Machine Capsizes.

CHARTRES, France, Sept. 3.—The French airman Maron was killed near here last night. He was observed flying over the city, where he was to have participated in an aviation meeting to-day. Later came the news of a fatal accident six miles away.

When seen Maron was flying at a height of about 600 feet. His motor failed, and he attempted to "plane" to the earth. He dropped 200 feet, and then the machine capsized. The airman's chest was crushed in by the steering lever. He received other serious injuries, and was dead when the peasants found him.

OUTRIDES A SOUND STORM.

Emile Bauplan Reaches Newport in Sloop, Then Upsets in His Dory.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 3.—Emile Bauplan of the firm of Foster, Mansfield & Co. of New York arrived safely in Newport yesterday aboard his auxiliary sloop Hiawatha, after running into the storm on Friday night in the Sound.

The craft left New York on Friday bound for Newport with a seaman, and the storm in all its fury was met in the evening. Later, while off Point Judith, the sloop caught the full force of wind and sea, besides heavy rain. The sails were lost, but finally the craft reached here in a sea-beaten condition and both men were almost exhausted.

Yesterday evening, while the dory of the sloop was returning from Newport, the little boat upset. Both men were in the water for some time, and were rescued by a passing power boat.

Mr. Bauplan lost his coat containing the checks he had received here for contracts completed by his firm, as well as valuable papers.

STOPPED BURIAL OF DOG.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Mass., Sept. 3.—Supt. Herbert Wellington of the local cemeteries this afternoon enlisted the aid of the local police to prevent the burial of a dog in the midst of the graves of many soldiers of the Revolution and other prominent persons.

Mrs. Sarah Bowman Vanness, widow of Joseph Vanness, who is buried in the cemetery, and a relative of the Rev. Thomas Vanness of the Second Unitarian Church on Copley Square, wishes to have the dog buried in a grave on the family lot directly beside that where her husband's body lies. When the police stopped her at the grave she took the dog's body back and buried it on her estate, temporarily at least.

MENTAL TEST OF OFFICER.

Army Board Appointed to Observe the Actions of Lieut. Vose.

An order the like of which is said never before to have been issued in the United States Army was recently sent to Fort Worden, Wash., by the commanding officer of the division from headquarters in San Francisco. On the carrying out of his order will depend the solution of the question whether First Lieut. Robert E. Vose of the Coast Artillery Corps is mentally qualified to act as an officer of the army.

The board which is to observe Lieut. Vose's mental workings is composed of the commanding officer at Fort Worden, the commanding officer of Lieut. Vose's company, and the post surgeon. The board is ordered to continue in existence for a period of six months, during which time they are to require of Lieut. Vose such duties as an officer of his age, rank, and experience should be able to perform, and then are to report specifically upon his capacity as an officer and upon "the extent of his lack of mentality, if any."

This is the order as issued:

> A board is appointed at Fort Worden, Wash., to consist of the post commander, the commanding officer of the Sixty-second Company of the Coast Artillery Corps, and the post surgeon, to meet whenever necessary at the call of the President thereof, for the purpose of observing First Lieut. Robert E. Vose, Coast Artillery Corps, for a period of six months, and require of him such duties as an officer of his rank, age, and experience should be able to perform, and specifically report upon his capacity as an officer, upon the manner in which he has acquitted himself in the performance of the duties required of him, and upon the extent of his lack of mentality, if any.

The issuance of the order has caused much talk in the army.

Lieut. Vose is thirty years old and has been in the army since Jan. 4, 1908, when he was appointed a Second Lieutenant from civil life by Col. Roosevelt, who was then President of the United States. Six months later in the same year he was promoted to a First Lieutenancy. He was born in Mississippi, but was living in Ohio when he got his commission.

SCORES OF ACTORS HUNTING FOR WORK

NOT MANY NEW ONES SO FAR

Actors are complaining that the difficulty of obtaining employment this season is greater than it has been for a good many years. There are to-day many well-known actors idle at what is usually the most active period of the theatrical year—actors whose services have been in demand and who have seldom been without engagements by Labor Day. Others who have signed contracts and are awaiting delayed calls for rehearsals are in the same situation as those without engagements of any sort.

The engagement agencies bear out the complaints of the actors. Their offices are overrun with applicants for places—they usually are, for that matter—and some players are asking for and accepting places much lower than those to which they have been accustomed.

The cause seems to be the tendency on the part of producing managers this year to hold back on the production of new plays until they have been able to feel the trend of theatrical business. Managers who heretofore have had half a dozen new plays before the public, or in the course of preparation by this time, are postponing their productions this year.

One firm that announced some thirty new pieces for production has put only two of them in rehearsal so far, although it is preparing to start others soon. Another firm that had three new plays running in New York on Labor Day last year has only one this year, and only one new company in rehearsal.

Of the Broadway theatres that housed first-class plays at this time last season, seven of them are closed or are playing motion pictures. Only two new theatres, excluding the Winter Garden and the Folies Bergere, have been added to the list of last year. Last year fifteen of the Labor Day attractions were new plays; this year there are only nine that can be considered new productions.

All this means that there is less for the actors to do, for while there may be the usual number of "road productions" to fill the out-of-town theatres, Broadway productions may be considered a measure of the managers' activities. It would seem, however, that productions for "the road" are proportionately fewer so far this year. At least, the big producing managers are sending out fewer companies.

On the other hand, according to some of the engagement agencies, there will be more than the usual number of what might be termed one-company managers this season. Men with just enough money to equip and send out one company are venturing into the field, and are taking charge of plays that have outrun their big city usefulness, but that are still "good for the one-night stands."

The big producers generally are adopting the policy of "farming out" plays of this sort to eliminate from their offices the clerical and managerial work attached to "one-night stand" business. The one company-manager, therefore, is able to rent good theatrical properties, and, of course, to give employment to many actors.

Many of these actors, however, belong to the seemingly unlimited supply of players who are not in demand for New York productions. For the latter the Broadway popularity of an actor, combined, of course, with his ability, makes him in demand, and when there are few Broadway productions under way the demand falls off.

There are plenty of announcements made of future productions, however, and the managers who are not so active as usual now, may make up for their slackness later in the season. Those closely connected with the theatrical business look on the delays in productions as a healthy sign. They think that by holding off until a safe guess at business conditions in general can be made, the managers will have less chance of failures due to unseasonable productions, and will also be able to prepare their plays with greater care. The number of productions a manager makes in a season, they say, is of less consequence than the number of weeks the companies play to profitable business.

But the actors who are not so fortunate as to be in the few early productions don't like the idea of having to wait a month or so longer than they expected before the first salary day comes around. They all want to be at work at the beginning of the season, and the season is supposed to be really under way on Labor Day.

AID MAINE PROHIBITIONISTS.

Ex-Gov. Glenn and Representative Hobson to Take the Stump.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 3.—The forces for and against constitutional prohibition in Maine enter on the closing week of the campaign to-morrow, and activity on both sides will be a little more marked.

The Prohibitionists will continue their meetings with their corps of speakers from outside the State, augmented by ex-Gov. Glenn of North Carolina and Representative Richmond P. Hobson of Alabama.

The repeal movement workers probably will adhere to their original plan of the distribution of a large amount of literature rather than on public meetings.

The present amendment to the Constitution, which the people will vote on a week from Monday, prohibits the Legislature from passing any law allowing the sale of liquor in the State for other than medicinal or mechanical purposes. There is also an old statute law that prohibits the sale of liquor for any purpose besides those already allowed, and in the event that the present constitutional amendment should be repealed by the people it would be necessary for the Legislature to repeal the prohibition statute and enact a new liquor law.

Russian Dancers to Add to Repertoire.

Morris Gest of Comstock & Gest, under whose management the Russian dancers are appearing at the Winter Garden, left yesterday for Chicago, to prepare for the appearance of the dancers there next week. The ballets will be given in that city for one week, and then the company will start on a tour to the Pacific Coast. Before they return to New York in the Spring they will add another ballet, "Prince Igor," to their répertoire. Mlle. Lydia Lopoukowa, who has been out of the cast at the Winter Garden for two weeks, on account of a sprained ankle, will appear again to-night and take her place as première in the ballet of "Les Sylphides."

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Edna Aug has been engaged by Henry B. Harris and Jesse Lasky for an important role in the new production to be made at the Folies Bergere on Sept. 18.

"The Musical Revue of 1911," the original Winter Garden production, which is to follow the Russian ballets there on Sept. 11, is now in rehearsal. This entertainment will be kept on for two weeks only, and will be followed by an entirely new show, in which Mlle. Gaby Deslys will be the principal star.

Edouard Durand, who has been playing the role of Gen. Bombastino in "The Girl of My Dreams," has left that company to take his old place in the character of Count Bolavario in "Alma, Where Do You Live?"

Farren Soutar, who was seen in America last with Edna May in "The Catch of the Season," arrived in New York on the Lusitania Saturday to appear in Thomas W. Ryley's American production of "Peggy."

MUTES SPEAK AT WEDDING.

Henry Plapinger and Miss Annie Bernhardt, graduates of the Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes at Lexington Avenue and Sixty-seventh Street, were married in the assembly room of Temple Emanu-El yesterday afternoon. The marriage was according to the orthodox Jewish rites. The Rev. Dr. Barnett A. Elzas performed the ceremony, using the sign language and also speaking orally at the same time. The answers of the contracting parties were given in the sign language and also orally, the couple having overcome dumbness to the extent of learning the necessary words.

Dr. Elzas said before the ceremony that there are about 2,000 Jewish deaf-mutes in New York, and this explains why the assembly room was crowded with men, women, and children, over nine-tenths of whom were deaf mutes. Miss Bernhardt is a teacher of sewing in the Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes, while Mr. Plapinger is a cloak designer. They were students together at the institution, and the marriage yesterday was the outcome of a long courtship.

The ceremony was performed under a canopy held aloft by four young men. The bride was attended by two of her elder women relatives, while the bridegroom's brother was best man. After the ceremony there was a reception in the assembly room, during which Mr. and Mrs. Plapinger's friends extended their congratulations.

Before asking the formal questions of the marriage ceremony Dr. Elzas spoke briefly to the couple, using the oral and sign languages at the same time.

"You may well rejoice," he said, "that this long-waited day has come and that you are to be united in the bonds of true affection, and are henceforth to share each others lives and to place your destinies in eternal hands. I therefore say to you, raise your hands to God and pray as you never prayed before that this union shall be one of happiness and not one of unhappiness."

After the ceremony Dr. Elzas said plans are now being discussed for the organization in New York of a synagogue for the exclusive use of the Jewish deaf-mutes of the city. He hopes that the realization of that plan is not to be long deferred.

DESERT FOOLED NEW YORKER

Policeman Mahoney Won't Return to It Unless He Has Guides.

Special to The New York Times.

RENO, Nev., Sept. 3.—James Mahoney, the New York policeman who is in Nevada for divorce and who was temporarily out of his mind on the desert while out with a surveying party, is again in Reno.

"I was not overcome by the heat of the desert, as was originally stated," he said to-day, "but became ill from drinking the water where we were working. It contained a large quantity of salt. When I left the surveying gang to go to the camp wagon about five miles distant I was confident that I would not lose the trail. As it happened I lost my way and wandered over the desert until that evening, when I struck the Desert Queen mine. I was about all in at that time, and suffered a great deal from thirst. After several hours' rest I started back for the camp, and again lost my way. I returned to the mine and spent the night there.

"Next morning I started out again, and that time I carried a bottle of water. After traveling for about an hour I realized that I was again lost. During my search for the camp I came across a ledge of ore that looked pretty good to me, and knocked off some samples and put them in my pocket. After wandering around for several hours I finally found the camp."

The samples of ore taken by Mahoney give evidence of containing a large amount of silver. Should the assays carry out appearances Mahoney with several friends will return to the district and locate the ground. He says he is confident he will be able to return to the ledge, but will not do so unless accompanied by others more used to the desert.

GROUT INVITES ACTION.

Calls on District Attorney to Take Bank Case to Grand Jury.

Edward M. Grout, former President of the failed Union Bank of Brooklyn, who has refused to testify at the State Banking Department's inquiry into the institution's affairs, made public yesterday this letter:

> Sept. 3, 1911.
> Hon. John F. Clarke, District Attorney, Kings County.
> Dear Sir: I appeal to you to take this controversy over the Union Bank to the tribunal where it lawfully belonged from the moment charges were made—a Grand Jury of Kings County. If the ordinary Grand Jury and the County Court are engrossed by ordinary business, then there is full power to summon an extraordinary Grand Jury, which can devote its time exclusively to this investigation. And the Appellate Division can, if need be, appoint a Special Term of the Supreme Court.
>
> I am willing, as my counsel, Mr. Littleton, said in open court on Aug. 30, to go before the Grand Jury and testify, waiving all privilege and immunity.
>
> The Banking Department is deliberately seeking to divert attention from itself. It recommended the reopening of this bank three years ago, and certified its solvency to the Supreme Court, declaring that it had nearly $2,000,000 of assets over liabilities. In doing this it rated certain assets at specified values. Now it attacks me for receiving and carrying these assets at the figures at which it turned them over to me. Stripped of details and nonessentials, this is the substance of the charge. It is not claimed that I created these assets, such as the Sullivan note for $150,000, passed by the department in five examinations, nor that I made them worthless. And of none of the allegations of forgeries, larcenies, or destruction of records is it even suggested that they occurred during my Presidency. And when the bank closed again this same department certified that I was not responsible for the assets which caused the closing.
> But the Banking Department, in the effort now to conceal its own fault in reopening the bank and in certifying its assets, has been conducting an illegal, prejudiced, and unfair examination, and subpoenaed me to appear before the very man who had fathered the false charges against me. The whole permanent staff of the department is to-day the same as it was three years ago when it reopened this bank. It has had exclusive possession for a year and a half of all records of the bank, and has denied me access to them. I have therefore resisted in court its illegal inquisition, and, as I have said, on the argument of the matter last Wednesday, my counsel openly demanded a proper investigation before a Grand Jury, the method found fully effective in Manhattan in the cases of the banks which failed last January, and the only method provided by our laws.
> I submit the matter to you for your wise and impartial official action. It may be that you have already concluded to follow this course. If so, I can only rejoice, and renew my offer to testify before the Grand Jury, where I believe that I will receive fair and just treatment, and not be made the scapegoat to cover up the shortcomings of a State department, whose head has apparently identified himself with the permanent staff, and who has not yet begun the house cleaning, which, it was publicly announced, the Governor directed him to do. It is not to be forgotten that this department, after the panic of 1907, reopened nine failed banks, only one of which justified the work of the department, and was able to remain open. Yours truly,
> EDWARD M. GROUT.

Justice Putnam has not yet handed down a decision on the application of the State Department for a warrant to bring Mr. Grout before the bank investigators.

SAGE FOUNDATION PLANS DISCLOSED

Forest Hills Gardens to be an Object Lesson in Modest Suburban Home-Building.

OBJECT IS NOT CHARITABLE

No "Paternal Control" Over Property Owners, but Each to Have Some Voice in Questions of Proper Use.

The Sage Foundation has at last broken its silence regarding its plans and purposes for its Forest Hills Gardens land development in Queens, a few miles out from Long Island City. John M. Glenn, Secretary of the Foundation, gave out yesterday the first statement on the subject coming from any one connected officially with the Sage Foundation and having inside information of its plans.

Mr. Glenn states emphatically that the Sage community is not in the least degree a charity. He says that it will not be conducted as a charity, or even for people of laboring-class means. It will be the home—a model home, however, the Foundation hopes to make it—for people of moderate means who want a real home, and have now, he says, to choose between a city apartment or a frame house in a suburb built on conventional lines.

The Foundation would offer Forest Hills Gardens as an inspiration to all the people of the city in suburb and home building. Mr. Glenn explains that the Sage Foundation and the Sage Foundation Homes Company are distinct corporations, the Foundation supplying the capital for the purchase and development of the project, but the Homes Company having entire charge of the planning and carrying out of the development scheme.

"The trustees of the Foundation," explains Mr. Glenn, "wished to create a suburb that would combine beauty in the arrangement of grounds with attractiveness and permanency in building. This required the investment of over $2,000,000; that is, over one-fifth of the capital of the Foundation. The maintenance of the work of the Foundation requires that its capital be kept undiminished and that this scheme, like all other investments, must yield a good business profit. The Foundation does not give charitable aid to individuals under any circumstances, its chief function being to inquire into social conditions and to teach effective methods of social betterment.

Chief Aim to Create an Example.

"Failure to make the project a reasonable commercial success would mean that the educational policy of the Foundation would miscarry. Its chief success, if it have any, will be the creation of an example of intelligent and charming use of real estate which will be tempting to other investors in the vicinity of New York and in more distant parts of the country.

"With these aims in view, the Trustees of the Foundation bought the tract of about 140 acres and organized a distinct corporation, the Sage Foundation Homes Company, to hold and develop it, and conveyed the land to this company. The Foundation has loaned the company the necessary capital for the laying out of the land, for the erection of buildings, for the maintenance of a proper force and equipment, and for other incidental purposes. The company is purely a practical business concern, and controls the management and handling of the property."

After stating that Robert W. de Forest is President of the company, and giving the names of its other officers, Mr. Glenn continues:

"The company starts with certain advantages that are not common in suburban development. The company has not had to go into the money market to borrow funds; it has been possible to pay cash for the property and for much of its material. As it is not looking for undue speculative profits, it can afford to move with care and deliberation. It has been able to complete in advance of its buildings an unusually large share of street construction, including the laying of water and gas mains and electric conduits, as well as much of its landscape work and plainting."

Not to Exercise Paternal Control.

Mr. Glenn describes how the suburb will be laid out, giving each house the maximum of light and air, and how the aim will be to make the place attractive as a whole as well as in detail. He then has this to say about the upkeep of the place:

"Streets and other property for general use will be maintained by an agency to be created for the purpose. Each lot owner will contribute his share of the cost and will have a proportionate voice in its expenditure. This plan accords with the desire of the company's officers that the management of the property shall become as democratic as possible, and all lot owners shall have the right and opportunity to express their views on any points that may arise. Each one will be independent as far as may be compatible with the welfare of his neighbors, each one will be able to exercise control over the use by his neighbors of their property in proportion to his interest in the whole property. The company will not attempt to exercise paternal control over lot and house owners.

"It desires to give full value for each purchase and at the same time to dispose of its property at prices that will give it a moderate but fair return for the money and time invested in it. It will not permit lot owners to build unsightly houses nor to establish nuisances, neither will it attempt to control their actions beyond seeing that the general atmosphere of beauty and order is preserved."

EX-POSTMASTER IS HELD.

Louis Sabow Accused of Absconding with His Depositors' Money.

Magistrate House in the West Side Court yesterday held without bail until to-day Louis Sabow, ex-Postmaster of Roosevelt, N. J., as a fugitive from justice. Sabow was arrested at the Hotel Astor on Saturday for running away with the funds of a bank he established at Roosevelt after resigning his Postmastership. Constables from that place are expected in court this morning with extradition papers.

Sabow served one term as Postmaster at Roosevelt and was reappointed on the recommendation of Representative Benjamin F. Howell, but before the Senate passed on his nomination he resigned. He then established a hotel and made friends with the foreign element of Roosevelt, especially the Poles and Hungarians. Tiring of the hotel business, he started a bank, and about a month ago disappeared with the funds of his depositors, estimated at nearly $30,000.

Most of the depositors in Sabow's bank were foreigners, and they made trouble for the authorities. Prosecutor Theodore B. Booraem was notified and assigned two constables to run Sabow down.

Huntsman Oddly Hurt.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 3.—John Berger of 517 Emery Avenue was returning in a boat on Hutchinson's Pond from a gunning trip, when he threw a stone to the shore. He lost his balance as the boat rocked and fell to the bottom of the skiff where his gun lay. His foot struck the trigger and he received the full charge in his shoulder.

Major Day's Funeral To-day.

Funeral services for Major Albert A. Day of the Twentieth Michigan Infantry, who died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. George E. Haynes, in Plattsburg, N. Y., on Friday, will be held from St. Michael's Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, at 2 P. M. to-day. Interment will be in Greenwood Cemetery. Major Day was the son of the late Rev. Samuel Day of Ann Arbor, Mich., who was Chaplain of the Eighth Illinois Regiment. He was the grandson of Judge Samuel Day of Boston. Major Day was in his seventieth year. Besides his daughter, Mrs. Haynes, he leaves a wife, two sons, Albert Day and Abbott Augustus Lowe Day, and a sister, Mrs. Charles A. Robinson of Hempstead, L. I.

Brig. Gen. Charles H. Greenleaf.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Sept. 3.—Brig. Gen. Charles H. Greenleaf, retired, died here yesterday. He was 70 years old.

MALACHI HOGAN DEAD.

Sporting Man Refereed Many Notable Bouts in Chicago.

DENVER, Col., Sept. 3.—Malachi Hogan, who died last night, came to Denver about a year ago for the benefit of his health. During his residence here he contributed articles on sporting subjects to Eastern newspapers, but his health would not permit of heavy work.

Hogan was a native of Chicago, and early in life he identified himself with boxing. He refereed many of the greatest fistic battles held in America, and was considered an authority on pugilism. He is survived by a widow, who was with him when he died. The body will be taken to Chicago for burial.

Malachi Hogan alternated with the late George Siler in refereeing the fights held in Tattersall's, when prize fighting was in its prime here.

Among the more notable events in which Hogan participated as referee was a six-round bout between "Kid" McCoy and Tommy Ryan. At the conclusion, Hogan gave the decision to McCoy. Ryan, dissatisfied, turned and sent a swing to Hogan's jaw. The blow started a riot, in which the police were barely able to keep the crowd from taking summary vengeance on the offending prize fighter.

It was in Hogan's café that J. W. Kelly wrote the song, "When Hogan Pays His Rent," which achieved nation-wide popularity. The character of the song was inspired by Hogan, who at that time had an acquaintanceship covering the country.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION | THE MARKETS OF EUROPE

No fewer than forty-eight stocks sold last week at new low prices for the year, but the average net change resulting from the week's operations was, nevertheless, relatively small. Prices moved irregularly, within a range which was narrow, compared with the very wide changes recorded during the earlier weeks of the month of August, and sufficient recoveries succeeded each of the declines of the week, to leave the average level of prices a trifle higher at the close of business on Friday, when the Stock Exchange adjourned for a three-day holiday, than it had been the previous Saturday. It was noted of the market that declines as well as advances were easily produced, but, generally speaking, there was a character of firmness in most issues which was entirely absent during the period of liquidation, which ten days ago practically ran its course, so far as all outward appearances show, and since when the market has been to a very considerable extent, so far as its day-to-day fluctuations are concerned, in the hands of professional traders.

The financial community was waiting last week upon a number of matters of more or less direct importance to the security markets, and the course of events on the Stock Exchange fairly accurately reflected the indisposition which prevailed to enter upon fresh commitments, except to a limited extent, and with a view to day-to-day adjustment of position. At home the railroad labor situation was watched with close attention, but the postponement until the end of the week of the conference between the representatives of the employes and the officers of the Harriman lines put off a definite issue in this matter which was rightly considered as of much importance, inasmuch as the outcome of the Union Pacific demands was regarded as likely to go far toward settling the outcome of any other wage demands which may be made upon the railroads in the near future. The Moroccan situation, another of the matters under surveillance by the financial markets, was placed in a somewhat similar position of suspension, in view of the fact that it was generally considered that the next stage of this matter would be determined by the outcome of the conference which was to be held in Berlin at the end of the week, at which the position of the French Government in respect to the demands of Germany would be laid before the German Government. Still another matter of considerable importance in the eyes of the New York market, the reorganization of the American Tobacco Company, was also awaiting settlement, and although another conference of the attorneys for the Government and for the company was held with the United States Circuit Court Judges no definite development in this situation occurred during the week. Then again the Government cotton report was due on Friday, and this added one more to the influences which put traders in a frame of mind to wait on expected developments rather than to engage in any market operations on a large scale.

On Tuesday a statement was issued by the United States Steel Corporation setting forth the fact that unfilled orders were larger on Aug. 20 than they had been on July 1, and recording that the average daily orders received by the Steel Corporation since the first of January had averaged over 7,000 tons a day more than during the corresponding period of 1910. It is one of the striking facts connected with the present situation that despite the almost country-wide references to quiet trade the volume of actual business, as reflected by such barometers as the orders of the Steel Corporation and the traffic of the railroads, can be regarded as small only by comparison with the highest records of the past. Compared with the average of a period of years the volume of business would appear highly satisfactory. Large as current business is actually, however, it is not sufficient to keep manufacturers and transportation companies busy to the extent of their capacity, and it is the existence of much idle capacity which emphasizes the quiet which is complained of in so many lines of production. Thus the Steel Corporation today is operating at less than 80 per cent. of its capacity, although producing a tonnage which would have kept its plants busy to their maximum capacity a very few years ago. A stimulus which will expand trade sufficiently to bring into operation manufacturing capacity now idle is not yet in sight, and for the moment, at least, the outlook continues to be for hand-to-mouth trading, which does not make possible any planning far ahead, even though it produces from day to day a very large volume of trade. The restricted influences which have to be borne in mind in any estimate of recent security market conditions are still effective, though for the moment at least one of these, the political interference with business, has been put into the background partly because of the adjournment of Congress, but perhaps to a more important extent because of the hope that some recent signs of a moderation of political unfriendliness toward corporations hold the promise of the adoption in the not distant future of a more constructive legislative programme in reference to corporation and business affairs generally. It would seem that this hope is, in part, merely a reaction from the pronounced discouragement which was recently manifested in influential quarters over the obstacles which political activities have thrown in the way of business expansion, but to the extent to which it is founded on any change in political sentiment, it is a most promising development.

There was a disposition at the close of the week to accept with some reserve the Government report on the condition of the cotton crop, which revealed a deterioration of 15.9 points during August. Only once in at least thirty years has the August deterioration been greater than this, and the average decline in that month in late years has been less than half of the loss which the Government reports this year. From the very high July 25 condition of 89.1, the cotton crop has been reduced to 73.2, which is slightly under the ten-year average for the Aug. 25 condition. Without allowing for any possible underestimating of condition by the Government agents in the cotton States, the condition given in Friday's report, applied to the record acreage planted this year, would indicate a crop somewhere in the neighborhood of 13,000,000 bales. This would be a large crop, but in view of the much better expectations entertained earlier in the season, and in view of the world's probable requirements during the cotton year which has just begun, such a yield of American cotton would be only moderately satisfactory. At the same time the export price would presumably be higher than in the event of a larger crop, and it might be that, so far as this one feature of the cotton crop is concerned, our export balance would not be impaired by a reduction of the cotton yield to 13,000,000 bales. At the same time it had been hoped that the yield would be a full million bales above this figure, and last Friday's report was, therefore, a cause for disappointment. If the further progress of the season shows that there was basis for the skepticism which cotton market circles expressed regarding the accuracy of the Government report, there will be a chance that this year's yield of cotton will be up to the best record of the past.

SLUMP ON LONDON EXCHANGE.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—A marked slump in British railroad securities at the beginning and the debacle in Kaffirs at the end were the chief features of a week of general depression, in which the tendency to improvement in foreign Government securities, owing to a growth of optimism over the Morocco situation, was the most satisfactory note. The trouble in the Kaffir department was begun by heavy selling in Paris.

BERLIN BOERSE DEPRESSED.

The Morocco Negotiations Still Causing Anxiety.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 3.—The uncertainty with regard to the situation in Wall Street and continued anxiety in reference to the outcome of the Franco-German Morocco negotiations caused an unusually acute depression on the Berlin Boerse last week. Operations are almost at a standstill, and the market closed yesterday amid heavy declines throughout the entire list.

Operators' expectations that September will usher in a period of comparative prosperity, after an unprecedented gloomy Summer, seem to be unfounded.

PARIS TRADING SLOW.

Business on Bourse Almost Insignificant Owing to Unrest.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 3.—Business on the Bourse remained insignificant. It was even less last week, owing to settlement day, which engendered a general weakness, affecting more specially French banks, South Africans, and gold.

Prices declined all around, chiefly owing to large sales by Berlin. German speculators were compelled to realize both in Paris and London. Although the Bourse closed heavy, it is hoped it may recover as soon as there is official news of a clearer atmosphere in foreign politics.

WHEAT SHIFTS FROM WEAK TO STRONG

COARSE GRAINS HARDEN, TOO

Government Report on Cotton and Free Offerings Make Buyers Wary—Pork Market Breaks, but Recovers.

The wheat market swung from a position of rather pronounced depression to one of comparative strength during last week. The early part of the week there was persistent liquidation pressure on account of the fear of heavy deliveries at Chicago on account of the enormous stocks there (over 19,000,000 bushels,) and prices declined 1½ to 2c per bushel. The decline was accompanied by heavy changing nearly all markets from September to later deliveries, and carrying charges were widened to the largest amounts at any time this year. When delivery day came the actual tenders were comparatively small, and operators who had sold heavily in expectation of heavy deliveries began covering. This slowly started the market up, and on Saturday there was an advance of about a cent a bushel in Western markets, the result of more serious aspects of the foreign political situation, and pronounced strength in Continental markets.

The American situation is at present one of comparative speculative indifference, and has been for some time past. The immense stocks at Chicago have, in the absence of stimulating conditions, weighed heavily and checked speculative operations. The conditions have been favorable in the Canadian Northwest for harvest, which has been advanced steadily, and is now well along. Some damage has been done by frost, but the general results promise to be of record proportions, although there is considerable difference in crop estimates, the figures ranging from 160,000,000 bushels for the three provinces to 200,000,000 bushels. There seems to be a disposition to discredit the maximum estimates.

Movement of American Spring wheat is increasing some, but receipts of all wheat in the United States continue somewhat restricted, and the gains in the visible supply are not large. The weather conditions have been favorable through the West for Fall plowing, and reports generally indicate likelihood of a small increase in acreage this year. Seeding is likely to be late, it is claimed, in order to avoid the possible damage from Hessian fly.

In Europe the conditions have been disturbed by the political developments, and at the close of the week the continental markets were decidedly strong. There was an advance of four cents a bushel in Berlin, where there seemed to be a great deal of excitement, not only owing to the political situation, but also owing to the pronounced scarcity of Russian offerings. A report was current that some German rye was being bought to go into Russia, which is in line with the Russian buying of durum wheat to go to North Russia from America.

The movement of new European wheat is reported fairly liberal and conditions good, owing to the very dry weather this year, but the situation is somewhat complicated by comparatively small shipments from exporting countries, and there seems to be an absence of pressure of cash supplies abroad. Although the world's crop estimates point to an outturn this year little, if any, short of the results of the past two years, still, the distribution of the supplies is such that importing markets show considerable firmness. The latest estimates of the world's crop of wheat make the present year but little under the record figures of last year, and also make this the third big crop in succession and the largest on record, excepting the last two years.

CORN.

The developments in the corn market have attracted an unusual amount of attention. They have been two directly opposite influences. The bearish developments have been a continuation of favorable weather, and the steady advancement of the corn crop. Already there are coming in a good many advices claiming that the developments since the rains began have been of a more favorable character. The Iowa State report showed an improvement in condition of about six points over last month, and as Iowa was one of the States which suffered seriously from dry weather the deduction was made that other States would also show considerable gain. The Oklahoma report, however, confirmed the previous low estimates, and the estimated yield there was only nine bushels per acre, making a crop of about 53,000,000 bushels, or 40,000,000 bushels under last year. The rains have also greatly improved the feed and forage conditions throughout the entire country. Belief seems to be growing that the final Government report will indicate quite a little improvement in the corn crop over the Aug. 1 report.

The bullish developments have been almost entirely from Europe. There has been a good export demand for corn, notwithstanding the fact that prices are nearly 50 per cent. higher than the low point of the Spring, and there seems to be quite general confidence that the demand will keep up. Consuming Europe is in a very trying position this year. The drought seriously curtailed the feed crops, not only of Western Europe, but even in Hungary, and the corn crop there is officially estimated at 55,000,000 bushels less than last year, which is more than the entire exports from the Danube this year. The exports from the Danube since Jan. 1 have been 48,000,000 bushels, while in the three preceding years the exports did not exceed 80,000,000 bushels any entire year.

The Russian corn crop is reported of fairly good promise. Russian exports this season have been 35,000,000 bushels so far. In the three years prior to this the Russian exports did not exceed 22,000,000 bushels any entire year. There is no export movement from Argentina this season, while last year Argentina shipped 105,000,000 bushels. Importing Europe has therefore to depend on a diminished crop in Southeastern Europe, nothing from Argentina, and a crop in the United States, by the last report, 500,000,000 bushels less than a year ago. This shortage may, however, be materially cut down in the forthcoming report. The political situation is another factor not to be overlooked.

OATS.

The market for oats has also shown a hardening tendency, with a fair volume of business. The strength in corn, persistently small interior receipts, and belief that the European foodstuffs situation is so acute this year that there will necessarily have to be a great deal of American foodstuffs bought for Europe have been influences favoring advances. The movement of oats has also been distinctly less than last year, and as a result of this decrease in the movement there has been a much smaller increase in the visible supply than was seen last year. The stocks in the visible are large, however, and with prices about 10 cents a bushel over last year there is considerable caution about following the up side of the market.

PROVISIONS.

The trade in hog products has not been of large volume the past week. Prices have been rather irregular, however, and the September delivery broke to about 75 cents per barrel under January. The whole list was unsettled by the break in pork, and prices sold off for all deliveries. The tenders on September contracts were smaller than looked for, however, and with a light movement of live hogs at Western points toward the close of the week there was a moderate recovery in values, and on Saturday the markets were strong, being materially influenced by the political conditions abroad.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The trade seems much confused owing to the recent advance in prices, particularly as it took place when more or less pressure was expected from the movement of the new crude oil crop. For a time the strength was logical, with the foreign demand for oil of large proportions, and home consuming inquiry also good, but recently demand has subsided materially, levels having been easily maintained.

The assertion is made in some quarters that large interests are responsible for the strength of the market at this time, with desire to create a higher selling basis, for the purpose of hedging crude, but the consistency of the upward movement has been a puzzling feature. The South sells only sparingly, and with the advance to about the six-cent level, their offerings have not increased heavily. It would not seem as though cotton crop conditions are responsible for this holding tendency, as Southerners have been disposing of cotton rather freely. Naturally, this selling of cotton enables farmers to hold their seed with greater tenacity, as it places them in a more independent financial position, but the reasons for the general unwillingness to sell are obscure. Fifteen dollars is rather low for seed, but there is no scarcity, oil is low, and the crusher's profit on that basis is not abnormal.

Some authorities express the opinion that the amount of oil sold recently to consumers has been underestimated, and it is the hedge buying in futures, at present due to the inability to procure crude oil, that is accountable for the market strength. At all events, sentiment has not been in favor of the advance, the opinion being prevalent in most quarters that sooner or later pressure from the South will increase, while in the meantime an advance in prices will tend to check the consuming demand, and the rapid buying early this season by foreigners will lessen the purchasing power later. Notwithstanding these assertions, however, indications point to a continuance of a good foreign demand on all recessions, with conditions abroad conducive to this. The Government Report, issued on Friday, had only a small effect on the list, and, as in cotton circles, the belief prevailed that the deterioration reports had been exaggerated, with prospects still bright for a bumper yield.

COTTON.

Despite the fact that during last week several sensational crop estimates were issued, including an official report, the trend of values was toward a lower level. It is beyond denial that were the reports made public generally credited, wild and strong markets would have ensued, but, contrary to precedent, the market was not unusually active. Undoubtedly the ignoring of the reports, particularly the Government, can be attributed to the recent agitation in the South for Government figures more favorable to the producer. Of course, it is generally recognized that the market contained a large short interest whose attitude would naturally be one of seeming indifference to bullish documents, but it is illogical to assume that if such faith was placed in the condition figures given, an advance of only twenty points maximum should occur, and more convincing was the selling credited to Southern sources immediately following the issuance of the official figures.

The condition of 73.2 as given by the Government [illegible] in September last year, and 63.7 two years ago. The deterioration was 15.9 for the month, compared with only 3.3 for the same month last year and 8.2 two years ago. The average deterioration for the month for the past ten years was 6.4. The unwillingness of the trade at large to believe in the low condition reported makes the attempt to arrive at final outturn on present prospects more difficult than ever. The yield per acre for the last ten years has averaged .386 bale, which, applied to this season's area planted of 35,000,000 acres, would indicate an outturn of 13,500,000 bales. On the other hand, using last season's yield per acre, a crop of under 12,000,000 bales is indicated, but it is an undisputed fact that cultivation this season is superior to that of any year, so that a surprisingly high yield per acre is not wholly unexpected. Last year's yield was smaller than any of the past fifteen, and is surely an unfair basis. Of course, it is not believed that 35,000,000 acres of cotton will be picked, but private accounts in this respect are that the amount of acreage abandoned and the amount of cotton replanted will be comparatively small. It is apparent that the general cotton trade was expecting condition figures in the neighborhood of 75 to 77, while the disposition at this time is to disregard the Government figures of 73.2, and many conservative authorities are expressing the sincere belief that with normal weather conditions the balance of the season, and in the advent of the crop evading the frost period safely, the outturn will be rather over 14,000,000 bales then under. It will be remembered that in connection with the severe deterioration recorded in Texas and Oklahoma by the Government, that the plant has been benefited materially by rains since official observations were taken. To partially offset this improvement, worms and other insects have been complained of in Alabama and parts of the central West, but apprehension has not been great.

The speculative situation is less interesting at this time than for several months, but the cotton market appears to have finally reached a supply-and-demand basis. With the maturing of the August delivery, premiums have generally disappeared, and the market presents a favorable hedging proposition for both the consumer and the producer. The movement of new cotton is liberal and the future market has shown the effects of hedging pressure on this account, while the trade demand in the interim has not been especially good. The situation from a milling standpoint is gradually undergoing improvement, but the benefits from the lower costs of raw material have not as yet been noticeable. Mills have secured only a minimum of the new crop, and prospects are that curtailment has not reached its height. This smaller production, however, will be beneficial in the end, as stocks are being gradually reduced and already it is apparent that the recent cuts in certain grades of dry goods have had a stimulating effect on the demand. It is a matter of conjecture as to what effect the recent Government Report will have upon the trade at large, but in view of the absence of faith in the figures, it is not thought that there will be any stampede, and buying of the raw material promises to continue on a conservative basis until the outlook for the crop shows some change for the worse.

FOURTH NATIONAL'S VIEW.

Bank's September Circular Speaks Hopefully of Conditions.

In its circular for September, on "The Business and Financial Outlook," the Fourth National Bank says:

"General business, although unsettled in spots, is fairly satisfactory in many lines. The record of bank clearings shows a quickening tendency in trade in many parts of the country. The improvement, although not large, is sufficient to indicate the trend of events, and it is perfectly natural to assume that if the crops turn out to be fairly satisfactory, so that the normal addition of new wealth is assured to the country as a whole, the business situation will be materially benefited before the end of the year. Too much, of course, cannot be taken for granted along this line, but it is certainly suggestive that the last figures given out by the American Railway Association touching the country's surplus of unused railroad equipment show that the total of idle freight cars has been reduced to 104,170 cars, this being the smallest total reported since the close of 1910. With the heavy advance shipments of corn at the West and of cotton at the South there is reason to believe that the railroads will have a larger business to handle in the near future, and that the whole country will become more confident. Current reports of railroad earnings show that the large systems are making considerable headway in reducing expenses and that they are operating on a relatively low expense ratio. Several roads have already taken very important action in the direction of retrenchment. These efforts have naturally led to the laying off of several thousand employes, chiefly in the West, and, while a similar policy has been considered by many of the important Eastern lines, it is not clear yet what their ultimate attitude will be. In the nature of things it would seem to be scarcely a proper time for the unions to press their claims for higher wages, as, whatever may be said respecting the policy adopted by some lines, it is undoubtedly true that the railroad industry as a whole is paying to-day as high an average wage as the business under present conditions will stand.

"With the heavy shipments of currency now being made from the various reserve centres of the United States into the crop-moving sections, there has developed a broader demand for money, with the result that there has been of late a definite hardening in discount rates. This is altogether natural for this season of the year, and, while the movement has not yet advanced rates to the level that is often seen at the opening of September, borrowers are showing a disposition to finance their requirements somewhat in advance of the time when they will find actual use for the money. Banks at the South, especially, have large requirements to provide for in connection with the marketing of a very bountiful cotton crop. Institutions in that section are well fortified to meet that demand, as the prosperity of the South is perhaps greater than it has ever been before. One of the strongest elements in the whole financial situation continues to be the splendid showing of the country's foreign trade, the excess of exports over imports for the seven completed months being $233,604,000, which compares with an export excess of only $2,647,000 for the same months of last year. The figure now shown has only been exceeded by the $372,000,000 export excess for those months of 1908 and the $324,000,000 total shown for the same period during the wonderfully prosperous months of 1901. Inasmuch as there are now indications that the labor difficulties on the other side have been sufficiently adjusted to allay the fears of serious disturbance to general trade in Great Britain, it is fair to assume that the principal foreign buyers of American produce will continue to effect large purchases in this market."

The New Inheritance Tax Law contains a provision entirely new and unusually liberal as compared with the inheritance tax laws of other States.

It is now possible for those who do not reside in the State of New York to deposit their securities in safe deposit boxes in New York without risk of an inheritance tax being imposed upon them.

The Union Trust Safe Deposit Company has an excellent modern vault conveniently located for visitors to New York as well as for residents, and its prices are moderate.

This Safe Deposit Vault is under the control of the Union Trust Company of New York (established 1864), and occupies part of the quarters of its Uptown Branch, at the corner of Thirty-Eighth Street and Fifth Avenue.

MINNESOTA TAXING NEW YORK ESTATES

ALREADY TAXED ONCE HERE

But Heirs Are Inclined to Settle the Claims—Reciprocal Laws Suggested to Prevent Such Double Taxation.

Demand has been made by Minnesota for the payment of inheritance taxes on property in that State left by Russell Sage, D. O. Mills, D. Willis James, Charles Merrill, and other New Yorkers who have died in recent years, despite the fact that inheritance taxes have been paid on the same property in this State. C. Louis Weeks, Assistant Attorney General of Minnesota, has been in the city for some time, holding conferences with attorneys for these estates and for some of the heirs, and he said last night that in every case the prospects were for an amicable adjustment of the claim of his State.

Mr. Weeks has also taken up the subject with respect to the estate of Adelaide Sloan of Massachusetts, and Attorney General Simpson has recently been in Chicago presenting a similar claim in connection with the estate of the late Marshall Field. The Minnesota officials estimate the amount of taxes due from the estates on which they are now working at $600,000, which is more than the total collections of their State on estates of both residents and non-residents for any year on record.

Up to about a year ago little or nothing had been done by the State of Minnesota for a long time toward the collection of inheritance taxes on the property of non-residents. This was largely due to the fact that it was not particularly the business of any official to look after such claims. Mr. Weeks became interested in the subject when John S. Kennedy died, leaving large holdings of stock in the Great Northern Railroad. Under the New York law Mr. Kennedy's estate was taxed here because the stock was here. Under the Minnesota law it was taxable because the property which the stock represented was located in that State. Mr. Weeks undertook to collect the Minnesota taxes and litigation followed, but it was withdrawn, and the tax, amounting to $345,000, was paid. This brought the inheritance tax receipts of the State for the fiscal year ended July 31, 1910, up to $504,000, and a good deal of political capital was made of it by the Republican campaigners last Fall.

The result was that a new law was passed creating a bureau in the Attorney General's office which should have charge of inheritance tax matters. Mr. Weeks was put at the head of it, and, although no other big sum was drawn from the estate of a New Yorker in the year ended last July 31, there was a distinct improvement in the collection of taxes on the estates of residents, so that the total was $454,000, or a good deal more than double what it had been the year before, outside of the Kennedy estate taxes.

Another change was made in the law to prevent any property of non-residents from escaping taxation. It provides that no Minnesota corporation can transfer a share of stock left by a decedent without the consent of the Attorney General. When a Minnesota corporation receives a stock certificate for transfer signed by an executor or administrator, it immediately refers the matter to the Attorney General's office, which is thus put on the trail of the estate. If the corporation neglects to fulfill this requirement it becomes liable for the amount of the tax with 10 per cent. added, and as it is a Minnesota corporation there is no escape for it.

Mr. Weeks freely admits the injustice of the resulting double taxation, but puts the blame on our own laws, which tax the estates of Minnesota residents.

"Before the recent amendment of your law," he said yesterday, "the estate of a Minnesota resident was taxed by New York on any securities he had in this State, and, of course, it was taxed in Minnesota too. In order to meet such cases I prepared an amendment to our law, which was passed by the Legislature, and which contains a reciprocal clause. That is, it provides that Minnesota will not tax the property of a non-resident if his own State does not tax the property of Minnesota residents. With Connecticut, for instance, we have full reciprocity. Neither taxes the estate of a resident of the other.

"Now, the New York law has been amended to exempt the property of non-residents so far as stocks and bonds are concerned, but has failed to exempt all the personal property, and as our law stands we have no power to exempt the estates of New Yorkers. I shall advocate a further amendment of our law so that we can give the same exemptions to any State that it gives to us, and as the matter stands now that will relieve New York estates from the Minnesota tax to a very large extent.

"Of course, all this is aside from the question of the estates from which we are now endeavoring to collect, as they antedate even the present reciprocal law."

The Minnesota property left by Russell Sage arose out of big land grants made many years ago to the Hastings & Dakota Railroad and the St. Paul & Pacific Railroad, in both of which Mr. Sage was a heavy stockholder. These railroad companies subsequently went out of business, and the land is now held by trustees for the benefit of their stockholders. D. O. Mills owned a large stock interest in the Treadwell mining companies, which are Minnesota corporations, although the mines are in Alaska and Mexico, and the principal offices in San Francisco. Marshall Field was a stockholder in various Minnesota railroad corporations, and D. Willis James, like John S. Kennedy, had large investments in Great Northern stock.

The Minnesota inheritance tax is progressive, and runs from 1 to 4 per cent. on bequests to husband or wife and to children, with an exemption of $10,000 to each heir. The tax on collateral bequests runs as high as 12 per cent. on large amounts.

NEW SALAMANDER IS FOUND.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—A brand-new salamander has been discovered in Costa Rica, according to Dr. Leonhard Stejneger, a Smithsonian Institution scientist. It is two and a half inches long, has a smooth, brown skin, somewhat striped, a wide, flat head, and a long, cylindrical tail.

The salamander has been a theme for the nature fakers from the days of Aristotle. Two ancient schools of naturalists disputed in vain whether it was a fireproof or a fire-extinguishing animal until Pliny the Elder, in the first century of the Christian era, put a salamander in a fire, thereby exploding both theories. Centuries afterward, when asbestos was first discovered, it was thought to be salamanders' wool, but Browne loosened this theory when he declared the creature to be "without wool, furre, or haire." The most popular nature faker of his day, Marco Polo, asserted that the salamander must be a mineral, and not a beast.

To-day it is known as a not especially attractive amphibian, resembling a lizard and behaving like an ordinary reptile.

EDITH HUGHES RETURNS.

Says She Had Gone to Yonkers with Friends—Other Disappearances.

While Mrs. Ada Hughes, mother of Edith Hughes, was sitting on the front stoop of the home of E. Reeve Merritt at 9 East Fifty-third Street, where she is employed as caretaker, Detective Van Twistern joined her to report his inability to find her daughter, who had been absent since Friday.

It was then 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and the mother had been out on the stoop since early morning, watching to see if her daughter would come home.

The detective had hardly reported that his inquiries in Harlem among young folk who were acquainted with Miss Hughes had proved unavailing, when far down the street he saw a young girl in a blue dress approaching. Over the blue dress was a checked black and white coat, while the black and white hat carried two small feathers, one black and one white.

"I think you will hear from your daughter pretty soon," the detective suggested, and raising his hat he withdrew, so that there would be no interference between the greeting of mother and daughter.

As the girlish figure in the blue dress drew closer Mrs. Hughes recognized her daughter and ran to meet her. They embraced and both wept copiously. Detective Van Twistern returned in a little while and questioned the girl closely. He learned that she had not been forcibly detained by any one, but had gone with some friends to Yonkers, after being unable to obtain the work she had hoped for on leaving her home Friday morning. She had first learned from the Sunday morning papers, she said, that the police and private detectives were looking for her.

Another young girl was reported missing yesterday. She is Agnes Tracey, 14 years old, of 228 East 118th Street, whose parents last saw her Saturday morning. She is small for her age, and wore a light Summer dress, with black shoes and stockings.

Jacob Rubin, 18 years old, of 24 Rutgers Place, disappeared on Thursday. After waiting until yesterday for his return, his parents asked the police to help find him. He wore a gray suit, with a blue shirt and black shoes and stockings.

Arthur J. Byrne, 37 years old, started for his home, at 959 Home Street, the Bronx, on Friday, wearing a white duck uniform of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company. Byrne failed to reach his home, and his family informed the police. He weighs 185 pounds, and has blue eyes and a fair complexion.

FAMILY WAS STARVING.

Father Who Sent Young Daughter Out to Beg Wins Court's Sympathy.

When Anton Bean, a butcher, of 515 East 158th Street, who was arrested on Saturday on the charge of having sent his ten-year-old daughter Anna to an apartment house to solicit alms, was arraigned before Magistrate Krotel in the Night Court last night Probation Officer O'Connell, who had been investigating the case, said that he had found the man's family practically starving in a two-room flat. He had been greatly touched by the deplorable condition he found, and asked that leniency be shown. Then O'Connell passed a hat among those who had come to the court to hear the case and collected $4, which he turned over to the defendant's wife with which to buy food.

Bean told Magistrate Krotel that he had been unable to obtain work for some months and had been trying to get enough money to go to Long Island, where he has friends he hoped would aid him. The Magistrate adjourned the case until to-morrow, when it will come up again in the West Side Court.

MARYLAND'S NATIONAL FIGHT

Machine to be for Harmon and the Lee Forces for Wilson.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 3.—The bitter fight in the Democratic primaries between the machine and anti-machine factions, which resulted in sixty-five delegates for State Senator Arthur P. Gorman to sixty-four for State Senator Blair Lee for the nomination for Governor, will be continued in the contest for control of the Maryland delegation to the Democratic National Convention.

The machine politicians are inclined to Judson Harmon. Senator Lee and Gov. Wilson are old school friends, Mr. Wilson having graduated from Princeton in the class of 1879, while Mr. Lee graduated in the class of 1880. Gov. Wilson is popular in Maryland. Every mention of his name during the recent campaign was greeted with applause. He will undoubtedly prove popular in the counties. Aided by his friends Senator Lee may be able to get a majority of the delegation for him next year.

IDENTIFY NIAGARA SUICIDE.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The body of the woman first noticed yesterday swirling in the rapids immediately below the Falls was identified to-day as that of Mrs. John Quinn of Lockport, niece of the late Benjamin Flagler. Her maiden name was Marion Flagler, and she was forty years old.

John Quinn is her second husband. Her first marriage is still talked about in the county as it was a social event of years ago. Immediately after the ceremony the bridegroom disappeared and was never heard from.

Mrs. Quinn disappeared from her home last Tuesday, first removing all her rings and dressing herself in her plainest gown. It is known that she came here by trolley, and it is surmised that she went immediately to the river.

WORLD'S FASTEST CRAFT RACE TO-DAY

Three British Motor Boats to Try to Lift America's International Trophy.

That swiftest of craft ever built, the hydroplane type of motor boat, is to be put to the test in Huntington Bay in the waters of Long Island Sound this afternoon to determine whether or not America shall retain the British international trophy, a cup given by Lord Northcliffe and won by America in England in 1907.

At a dinner last night on board Commodore H. H. Melville's yacht Vergana, in Huntington Bay, at which were present W. E. Axtell of the Maple Leaf III. W. L. Marshall, representing Lord Northcliff; Noel Robins of the Pioneer and the Race Committee, it was decided that the two boats to race as running mates to the Dixie IV. in the defense of the cup, should not be chosen until this morning. The Disturber II. is most likely to be one of the boats selected. Either the Viva or the Sand Burr II. is likely to be chosen as the other. None of the other boats have been mentioned as possible defenders. The Disturber's new shaft has been fitted and she is ready to start in the morning.

Three British motor boats driven by the fastest modern engines ever designed have been selected by the European contenders and are out in the water ready for the fray. Intense interest centres in the contest this year because of the unprecedented records made by the British boats in their elimination trials across the water, and experts are of the opinion that a victory by America, if she attains it, will not be so easy as in previous years.

The hydroplane is a unique type of craft. Driven at high speed, it rises more than half out of the water, shooting up on each side a wall of spray that may be seen for miles away as the boat speeds over its course.

The three British boats are Maple Leaf III., owned by E. Mackay Edgar; Tyreless III., owned by F. Gordon Pratt, and Pioneer, owned by the Duke of Westminster. America will pin her faith chiefly, so far as was known up to last night, in Dixie IV., owned by H. H. Melvile, August Heckshcr, and Frederick K. Burnham. Several other boats, including Vita, Viva, Nameless, and Defender, took part in the elimination trials before the Regatta Committee of the Motor Boat Club of America.

An indication of the relative speeds of the British and American boats was shown at their respective elimination trials. The British boat Maple Leaf, soon after launching last March, made what was then considered a world's record. She made 49½ knots, or considerably more than 50 statute miles, an hour. Each of her two engines developed 350 horse power. Her speed is much greater than the American winner of the trophy last year.

Dixie IV., America's defender and the namesake of the Dixie I., which took the cup away from the British in 1907, also is equipped with high-power engines, and she has shown to the satisfaction of the committee that she is capable of attaining a speed equal to, if not greater than, that of the Maple Leaf. In some of her tests she showed about 50 miles an hour.

The races to-day are scheduled to begin at 2 o'clock and are to extend over Tuesday, and possibly Wednesday. The course mapped out is 7½ miles around, making 30 miles for the four rounds, fixed as the distance of the race. The country which first wins two races, the rules provide, shall be declared the winner.

The American craft devoted yesterday to practice in Huntington Bay. Sandbur II. covered one round of the course at a speed of 33 knots, bettering her average speed made on Friday by about 6 knots. Disturber II. covered a round at 41 knots, breaking one of her shafts in doing so. A duplicate shaft at Long Island City was sent for, and her owner, James E. Pugh, hoped to have it fitted in time to give her another trial. Viva went out and made a fair showing. Vita II. was unable to complete one round.

TEAMS SELECTED FOR RELAY.

New York and Brooklyn Schoolboys Who Will Race at Syracuse.

The cream of the athletes of the Brooklyn public schools assembled at the Public School Athletic League Field Saturday morning to try-out for the team that will represent that borough in the half-mile invitation inter-city relay race at the New York State Fair at Syracuse a week from to-day. The following are the boys who will make the trip at the expense of the State Fair Commission: Maurice Weismann, Public School 78; Jack Weiss, Public School 164; Abraham Levinson, Public School 25; Arthur Callahan, Public School 9, and Barnett Meidenberg, Public School 164.

Maurice Weismann was selected Captain of the team by his teammates, and the boys will report to him at the Public School Athletic League Field every morning in order to practice touching-off, and do other preliminary work. It is very seldom that the public school boys get a trip of this kind, and they all appreciate it and are willing to train hard in order to make a good showing against the best public school boys of Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Utica, Albany, and New York. The New York team, composed of Lowney, Briggs, Moss, Tannebaum, and Gossnel is doing its preliminary work at Macomb's Dam Park. They have selected Francis Lowney of Public School 18, as their Captain.

HAMLIN, FREDERICK R.—The people of the State of New York, by the grace of God, free and independent, to MARY B. WARNER, Mary E. Hamlin, Harry L. Hamlin, George J. Hamlin, Herbert W. Hamlin, Bessie H. Clark, Dorothy Hamlin, Judith Hamlin, George E. Hamlin, Anna M. Hamlin, John F. Hamlin, Frederick A. Hamlin, Mary C. Hamlin, Mancel T. Clark, Jr., and Lew M. Fields, and to all persons interested in the Trust Estate of FREDERICK R. HAMLIN, late of the County of New York, deceased, as creditors, legatees, next of kin, or otherwise, send greeting:

You and each of you are hereby cited and required personally to be and appear before our Surrogate of the County of New York, at the Surrogates' Court of said County, held at the Hall of Records, in the County of New York, on the 10th day of October, 1911, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to attend a judicial settlement of the account of proceedings filed with the Clerk of this Court, April 11, 1908, and of the account of proceedings filed with said Clerk, Aug. 19, 1911, rendered and filed by Julian Mitchell and William M. Gray, as trustees of the last will and testament of said deceased; and such of you as are hereby cited as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of the Surrogates' Court of the said [L. S.] County of New York to be hereunto affixed.

Witness, Hon. Robert Ludlow Fowler, a Surrogate of our said County, at the County of New York, the 19th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eleven. DANIEL J. DOWDNEY, Clerk of the Surrogates' Court.

ALBERT E. SEIBERT, Esq., Attorney for Trustees, 40 Wall Street, New York City.

A Riverside Drive Opportunity

¶ Two apartments, (ten rooms and three baths each,) in one of the new highest class apartment buildings on Riverside Drive will be vacated October 1st. To people of unquestionable references, I am authorized to offer them at very low rents, if taken at once, as it is desired for particular reasons to rent them immediately. It is unusual to have a vacancy in this building.

¶ The apartments can be leased for between three and four thousand dollars per annum. They are worth much more. If interested, write me at once and I will personally give location and rents.

A Good Beginning

The J. L. Kesner Company, 6th Avenue and 22d Street, New York, writes under date of August 24th:—

"On Monday morning last, we placed an advertisement in The New York Times stating that we were open to purchase a million dollars' worth of merchandise for New York's newest department store. This advertisement, which by the way, was placed in only one morning paper, that being The Times, has brought us representatives from all over the country with samples of the newest merchandise and some very special propositions, which, needless to say, we have taken advantage of, and in fact a great number of New Yorkers will have reason to thank The Times for many exceptional bargains, which will be the result of the advertisement placed in your paper. We only trust that any future advertising we may place in The Times will bring us as satisfactory and great results.

"Yours truly, J. L. KESNER CO."

Renting Rooms.

¶ Signs in the parlor window, "Rooms for Rent," are fast becoming obsolete. They have been superseded by a modern method of securing desirable roomers or boarders.

¶Prospective tenants consult the Furnished Room and Boarders Wanted columns of The New York Times to locate accessible places in the best neighborhoods. Advertisements in The New York Times attract the best class of people.

¶ Go to any advertising agency or telephone your advertisement to The New York Times, Bryant 1000.

CHILD DESERTIONS AROUSE RICHMOND

DESERTERS TO BE RUN DOWN

District Attorney Believes This Will Lessen the Occurrences—Fear of the Poor Farm a Cause.

Thirty-five children have been deserted on Staten Island in the past few months. Officials of Richmond Borough cannot explain this great number of desertions, which have been a serious tax on the borough's funds and has enlisted the attention of District Attorney Fach, his assistant, Mr. Ennis; Jeremiah Conley, the Richmond Commissioner of Charities, and others.

It is planned now to pursue the child deserters to the most distant States, regardless of the expense, in the hope of checking recurrences. Traces of some of the deserters have been discovered in Minnesota and California, while others are in New Jersey and New England.

Meanwhile, the child victims of parental indifference are being cared for in various ways. Some are turned over to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which has a home at Castleton. From this place they are farmed out to institutions. Others, whose mothers were deserted at the same time, are aided by allowances from the Charities Department or aided by private philanthropy. Agent Cowan of the Children's Society said yesterday that some of the desertion cases were most pitiful.

In about one-third of the cases the child deserters are mothers who have eloped, leaving their little ones behind. In some of the cases the fathers have eloped with younger women. These cases have occurred principally among the Italians. The Staten Island authorities hesitated yesterday to group the child deserters by nationalities, but an investigation showed that the Italian race contributes more than its quota in proportion to the population of the borough.

One of the cases called to the attention of the Staten Island authorities was that of two families broken up by the eloping of two parents, one of each family with the other. This case left six little ones to be cared for. District Attorney Fach expressed himself as being of the opinion that these desertions are on the increase.

Mr. Fach spoke of the difficulty of finding the deserters. But after their location he said his troubles had only begun.

"In one of the cases I have spoken about," he continued, "the man is in California. In another, in Minnesota. I don't know how it is learned that my office is busy on these cases, but the information gets out somehow. Both of the guilty persons have friends who have come to me already and begged me to let up on them. They spoke of the great expense to the county, and gave other reasons why the law should not take its course.

"When these people are brought back, more pressure will be brought to bear. In the case of a woman, they will say, it is a shame to send a woman who has made a mistake to prison, while the man who led her astray has escaped. In the case of a man they will urge that if he is put in jail he cannot support his family anyway, and the whole lot are made public charges."

District Attorney Fach said he could hope to do little unless public opinion is aroused and supports the infliction of severe sentences for the offense.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—The northern storm area has passed rapidly eastward beyond the field of observation, and has been followed by fair and cooler weather in the Northern States from the lake region east to the Atlantic Coast. There were showers, however, Saturday night in Northern New York. Local rains are reported from the Gulf States. Temperatures have not changed decidedly in the Southern and Western States, and are generally near the normal in these regions. Considerably cooler weather is reported from the far Southwest. The indications are that the weather will be fair Monday and Tuesday in New England, the Middle Atlantic States, the lower lake region, and the Upper Ohio Valley. In the South Atlantic and Gulf States, the plains States, and Rocky Mountain region the weather will be unsettled, with local rains Monday and propably Tuesday. The weather will be cooler Monday in the Middle Atlantic Coast and the Northwest, and Tuesday in the Middle Plains States, elsewhere throughout the country the temperature changes will be unimportant during the next forty-eight hours.

The winds along the New England and Middle Atlantic Coast, light variable, mostly north; South Atlantic and East Gulf Coast, light to moderate variable.

Steamers departing for European ports will have moderate north winds and fair weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECASTS TO-DAY AND TUESDAY.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M......	67	69	4 P. M......	71	81
6 A. M......	66	68	6 P. M......	71	79
9 A. M......	70	76	9 P. M......	70	70
12 M..........	70	76	11 P. M......	70	69

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 74; for the corresponding date last year it was 68; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 70.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 72; at 8 P. M. it was 73. Maximum temperature, 81 degrees at 1:30 P. M.; minimum, 68 degrees at 6 A. M. Humidity, 85 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 55 per cent. at 8 P. M.

TAFT CABLES TO KAISER.

Speaks of Cordial Relations in Message on Steuben Statue.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—In response to Emperor William's cordial cablegram of thanks for the copy of the statue of Gen. Baron von Steuben, the Prussian-American soldier, which was unveiled at Potsdam yesterday, President Taft has sent this message to the German ruler:

> I cordially appreciate your courteous cablegram of to-day's date, announcing the unveiling of the replica of the Steuben Statue, and conveying your thanks and those of the German people for this present, transmitted in virtue of the joint resolution of the Congress of the United States.
> I shall take great satisfaction in communicating your Majesty's telegram to the Congress of the United States at the opening of its next session, in December next, as an evidence of the cordial relations which have ever subsisted between the United States and the German Empire.
